The Harrodsburg Democrat is responsible for the following: "Mr. John H. Grimes, jr., of Burgin, has discovered a principle of vegetable growth, which may prove a gold mine if properly handled and developed. His youngest son, Holden, is extremely fond of base-ball, as every well-regulated young man is, but his father disapproving of the sport, would always take a base ball away from him whenever found on his person and plant it in the yard beneath about one foot of earth, where he reasonably supposed it was safe. But Phoenix like, a vine has sprung up from these buried implements of the national game which has produced with marvelous rapidity three full-grown, perfectly shaped base-ball bats which depend from the mother stem in just the proper position to knock a 3-bagger to center field from a drop ball. The bat brought to our office was 49 inches long,—a trifle over the usual length,—and 10 inches around the "bulge." This singular endorsement of the national game by a freak of nature can be seen at the Democrat office. Mr. Grimes contemplates planting 10 acres in bats next season and hopes to supply the Kentucky market."

A few weeks ago the body of a young man by the name of Gorden was found in the Ohio river near Madison, with a pistol wound in his forehead and the marks of brass knucks on his cheek. He was known to have been on a small fishing boat near Rabbit Hash landing on the Indiana side which was occupied by a [illegible] named Long from Rising Sun, Ind., and a woman, the wife of another man by the name of Ross [illegible]. It seems that the woman had about two weeks since gone back to her home to drive away her children and while there let fall some hints that caused her husband and others to suspect foul play. In the mean time the word had been sent here to Marshall Myrick to keep an eye on Long, and last Sunday, a little after noon, he, in company with Roger Williams went over to arrest their man. This did not prove an easy job, for he fought like a tiger, and while Williams and he were scuffling, both tumbling into the water, Myrick was engaged with the woman, who was endeavoring to reach a shot gun on the boat. Ed Rodgers also came in about this time and finally, after a desperate struggle, Long was secured and brought to the Carrollton jail. The woman was the next day (Monday) arrested as an accomplice, and on Tuesday was placed in jail. The examining trial was made before Judge Donaldson Friday, but was not finished. The strongest evidence against the accused is about as follows: About the 3d of November Charles Gorden disappeared from here, having stayed all night at the National hotel on the 2d, and was not seen afterward. About that time J. K. Lawdeh, who lives near the mouth of Little Kentucky river, heard some screams of distress in the direction of Long's boat, about midnight. Next morning the boat had moved to the Indiana side. He told Mr. Corn's folks about it next morning. A brother of Gorden recognized a collar-button found in Long's possession as one that he had given to the murdered man. Mrs. Burns, of Boone, testified that some time ago the woman who is arrested as an accomplice told her that Long had killed Gorden, or words to that effect. The accused have proved an alibi by relatives, and contradict all material statements.—Carrollton Democrat.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE
ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at [illegible] throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the [illegible] Worm affections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the [illegible] all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and [illegible] continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no [illegible] are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When [illegible] feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, [illegible] the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms. [illegible] and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms [illegible] therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observant of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be [illegible] by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession from all parts of the country testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a simple purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

BEYOND THE HILLS.

What's beyond the [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Purple hues [illegible]

What a [illegible]
[illegible]
Is there [illegible]
Just beyond the hill tops dim.

O, my Guardian Angel, tell me,
[illegible]
[illegible]
What my dearest dreams [illegible]

In the valley all about me
Friends are [illegible]
But I long to mount the hill tops
[illegible]

O, my faithful Guardian Angel,
[illegible]
I must climb those purple heights
See the star of Fame arise.

I must go and win and conquer
[illegible]
And the world shall bow before me
And shall give me great renown.

But my faithful Guardian Angel
Whispers softly: [illegible]
[illegible]
And [illegible]

"Look around thee, in the valley,
All the work there is to do
For the fields are white with harvest
And the laborers are few.

"You will faint upon the mountains,
And your bread will turn to stone
[illegible]
Where the star of Fame once shone.

"Dare it not—the smile illusive,
Is too oft a hidden frown
You will shrink and pain and shudder
At the sharp thorns in your crown.

"Do not slight the wayside flowers
And the blessings near at hand;
Patient working, patient waiting,
—Isabel Hotchkiss, in Detroit Free Press.

A LOST OPPORTUNITY.

A Tale of Disappointment from "Queue Tortue."

In an out-of-the-way section of what is known in Louisiana as the Attakapas country lies the little prairie of Queue Tortue, or Turtle's Tail. Its inhabitants are the descendants of the original Acadian settlers, and for over a century past they have kept almost entirely to themselves, marrying and intermarrying, so that every resident there is related to every body else in the prairie. They have a decided distaste for any thing that tends toward progress, and the habits and manners of their fathers are followed as piously as are the instructions of their priest. Simple-hearted, gay and imbued with all the esprit of their French ancestors, they are probably as contented a people as can be found on either side of the Atlantic. Raising cattle, tilling some cotton and loving their families, they entertain but little regard for what is transpiring in the great world beyond the boundaries of Queue Tortue. Their wants are but few, and with enough coffee, tobacco and corn, they live contentedly to a ripe old age. Strong in their affections, family ties are held in reverence, and a fourth cousin receives as hearty a welcome at their simple homes as a brother or near relative. They are, however, exceedingly shy of strangers, and it requires a long residence in that locality to secure even the faintest approach of intimacy with them.

Near the center of the prairie, in a plain cottage of four rooms, the Ponpon family lived in that bucolic simplicity which had given such longevity to their ancestors. To the observer it would seem that the same strings of red peppers were hanging from the rafters that were picked in the forties, and the same little black coffee-pot was resting beside the hearth out of which their grandsire, Pierre Alcibiade Ponpon, had taken his morning cup. There could be no question about the furniture, for all of it, save one modern bedstead, purchased in later times for the girls, was of so primitive a type it was even eloquent of its antiquity. At one end of the gallery an antiquated hand-loom told where the family nankin cottonade came from, and a collection of empty sardine boxes under the house suggested newly acquired tastes not entirely in keeping with the primitive character of the afore-mentioned loom. Four yellow-haired dogs dozed languidly in the afternoon sunshine on the bare patch of earth in front of the domicile, now and then mustering up sufficient energy to go through a sort of banjo-picking vibratory movement with the left hind leg, as they sought to remove the predatory flea.

Beyond, the swells of the prairie went rolling away in the distance like great billows of green, with here and there knots of cattle like bits of seaweed afloat on the surface. Still beyond, sky and grass met where it appeared the world ended. Skirtings of cypress in some directions told of meandering bayous, and once in a while a thin column of smoke indicated the position of the nearest houses, some four or five miles away.

It was a bright October afternoon and the air was fragrant with the odor of the ripening grasses and flowers of the prairie. Great white clouds in broken outline lay along the horizon like mountain ranges, the sides of which were riven by gorges and canyons of shadow. A crew of nomadic white cranes were pluming themselves at a water hole about a quarter of a mile away, while above, seeking the shelter of the far-off sea marsh, wisps of blue-winged teal were scudding before the first north winds of the autumn. Tied to a china tree near the Ponpon dwelling, with drooping head and eyes half-closed, stood a small Creole pony, as uncanny a looking quadruped as a horseman could well imagine. A rough saddle with heavy wooden stirrups, a rawhide bridle with strong curb bit and a saddle blanket made of moss, were the only ornaments of the little beast. Diminutive as was the animal, it was evident from the length of the stirrup straps that his rider was quite a tall individual. Such a surmise would have been at once corroborated by a glance into the front room, which served at once as parlor, bed chamber and sitting-room. There, on a low, straight-backed oak chair of raw hide bottom, sat a young man of about twenty-five, his face bronzed by exposure, and his long boots bespattered with mud. Standing in those same boots the wiry cavalier would have measured something like six feet two inches. His features showed that he was of Anglo-Saxon blood. He was known in the neighborhood as "M'sieu Hareese," a slight variation on his patronymic, Harris. Some eighteen months before the afternoon referred to he had purchased a tract of land in the prairie, and on it had opened a stock farm on a small scale. He was industrious, genial and frank, so that after a period of probation he was greeted by the residents thereabouts with something like cordiality. His little ranch, as he liked to call it, was about five miles away from the Ponpon residence, and on this occasion he had galloped across the prairie and ridden directly into what would have been the front yard of that family, had there been any fences around the place. There was something in his face that betokened unusual earnestness, and when he [illegible] out of the saddle and, hat in [illegible] the young lady, in a [illegible] on the gallery. If her brother wasn't at home, he [illegible] very much [illegible]

[illegible] Alosine Ponpon was the elder of two sisters. The younger, [illegible], had [illegible] a gallant young [illegible] and was now [illegible]

This marriage of the more youthful sister had [illegible] of Alosine, [illegible] had always been [illegible] that [illegible] bound to take the elder daughter first. The bridal party, mounted on tough little Creole [illegible] and followed by a wagon of household goods, had hardly disappeared behind a knoll in the prairie [illegible] a paroxysm of tears, and refused to be comforted. From that day she formed a resolution that if she died an old maid it would not be her fault. She was, perhaps, a little too tall and angular to attract some of the fastidious young men, and her undisguised efforts to capture a gallant were perhaps too much for the gay beaux of the prairie. Be this as it may, few ever stopped at the house longer than time enough to water their horses or take a cup of coffee, except, perhaps, Aleck Harris. He had been over often, and had spent whole afternoons with her brother talking over stock matters and the improvement of grasses.

Alosine had nurtured a warm sentiment for the young man, and when he was in the house invariably managed to be in the same room. She thought she saw signs of reciprocated feeling frequently, and now that he had come over at a time when she was alone she was sure there was but one object to his mission. On his approach she had darted into her room, given a hurried twist to her back hair and encircled her neck with a flaming red ribbon, so that when he reached the steps she looked at her best.

"Boucta is not here, is he?" asked the bold rider as he took a seat.

"Non; he go long time, yes. An ow yo doo, Sieur Hareese? Hi opes yo weel," and Alosine proffered him a glass of water.

"Oh, I'm very well, mamselle," and he swallowed the water as only a thirsty man can. "I'm very sorry Boucta is gone, for I came over here on very important business. The truth is, I wanted to ask him a question in which you yourself are somewhat interested."

The sunlight danced on the prairie swells. The blossoms of the wild indigo and the tall stems of the rushes in the waterhole away off beyond the corncrib seemed to tremble with delight. Roseate hues tinted the cumulous clouds and the plaintive whistle of the "killdee" overhead became the voluptuous notes of the mockingbird. Alosine had been looking forward to this moment for the last twenty years, and now it had come. Ah! how noble that M'sieu Hareese looked now. Such strength, such dash, such manly beauty. Her heart almost choked her. Its pulsations were rapid and strong.

"I ham vare sorree dat he ham gone, Sieur Hareese," she was just able to say. "Eet was so good ob yo fo to come."

"Oh, don't mention that, mamselle. I have been thinking over this matter for a long time, and I must confess that I was a little afraid of speaking to you about it. I thought I would see Boucta first."

As Alosine looked at Aleck Harris now the tears welled up into her eyes. She had seen his comfortable house on the prairie and had a very fair idea of his herd. Even while he was talking she could fancy herself seated in the big rocking-chair on the gallery of the Harris home, dressed in pink and white calico, with a breastpin of imposing size glistening in her bosom. She had longed for these things all her life.

"Yees! Sieur Hareese, my brudder he vare nice to me all de time, hau ee kno, what ee like, hi iike." Then she thought that if Sieur Hareese did not wait for her brother a day would be lost, and in such affairs a day means an eternity. So, holding her sunbonnet before her face just low enough to permit her big black eyes to peer over the edge, she said: "Spose mi brudder no come tell de eebening, weel yo tak seat han wait fo im?"

"I can't wait. You see, I've got to decide to-day."

She was sure the eventful hour had arrived. She looked into the open door at the front room. Surely the "Hareese" house was better than this. She knew of his carpeted floors, marble-top tables and handsome pictures, and she yearned to become their mistress. She resolved to draw him out at once.

"Aleck," it was the first time she had ever pronounced that name aloud and she trembled at her audacity, but she must go on. "Aleck, hi wooed be much 'bliged ef ye wooed speak to me jus like ye wooed speak to mi brudder. Wat you want fo hask im yo can hask me. Eet will be hall de same."

Aleck Harris looked up into her face squarely and frankly. He had not the slightest suspicion of what had caused those deep blushes and bright sparkle in those eyes. He was a mere babe in such matters.

"Well, if I must, why I must, but I would much prefer talking to your brother. You know how hard it is to move a woman when her affections are concerned, and I confess I haven't much faith in moving you."—Alosine whispered almost inaudibly: "Yo must not say dat."—"The truth is old man Fagot, over on the bayou, has offered me his fast mare, that he bought in New Orleans, for one hundred dollars. Now, I know how much you like that pet horse of yours, but I prefer him to Fagot's, and I came over to see whether you would sell. If Boucta was here I know I could make a trade."

The young lady was looking him now squarely in the eye. With every word he uttered her face grew paler and paler. At last she could stand it no longer.

"Sieur Hareese! Stop right dare. I hall de time tinks yo one gentleman han I halways say so to my brudder, but hi can no stan dis. Yo come ere to 'sult apoor leetle girl hin er hown 'ouse. Yo har de most awefullest man what I never see. Eet is too much, too much," and she rushed to her room and threw herself on the bed.

Harris was staggered. He could not account for the strange actions of the young lady. He knew he had said nothing to wound her feelings. But why this outburst? At last it dawned on him that the lady had misinterpreted his visit as one of wooing. It struck him all of a heap. Such a thought had never entered his mind. He could hear her sobs from an inner room, and they touched him. After all it might be better for him to take a wife. He had become tired of living alone. As he looked across the prairie, dotted with cattle, some of them his own, he reflected over the matter. He might do worse. Alosine was not bad looking and was a good domestic girl. Yes, he would try it. He called to her, but no answer came. Then he arose and approached her room. He was met with a volley of shrieks.

"Alosine, my darling, will you take me now. It is you, and not the horse, I want."

Alas! his words fell upon a deserted house. He had hesitated before the closed door. He felt that it would not be proper for him to enter, so he called in tones [illegible] "Alosine! Alosine!" but everything was silent. Then as a [illegible] the young lady had fled over the prairie and she never heard the [illegible] call of her new lover. He [illegible] mounted his pony and rode back [illegible] regretting that he had [illegible] the timid Alosine.

The brother Boucta called upon him the [illegible] for an explanation, when Harris told of Alosine's misapprehension of his object, and a bargain was made for her pet horse. Not a word did Harris say of his sudden resolution to ask the girl's hand. The episode [illegible], however, attracted his attention to matrimony, and a few months later he espoused [illegible] of [illegible]. It was only after his marriage that he told the story on himself, which coming to Alosine's ears, sent her to bed sick.

Sitting on that same gallery of the Ponpon home an old lady can still be seen of afternoons, but no horseman ever alights beneath the china tree near her home. Her one golden opportunity had gone.—Charles A. Whitney, in N. O. Times-Democrat.

PARIS MODES.

Some of the Graceful Costumes and Tasteful Millinery Recently Introduced.

The styles for the coming winter are now fully displayed and I must say that the feminine division of humanity was never more gracefully or tastefully arrayed. The threatened big bonnets have not yet made their appearance, having been donned only by some few eccentric ladies, who have found no one to copy them. The charming and becoming little capotes retain their vogue, with very high trimming in front. They are composed of bead network for evening wear and are trimmed with pale-tinted ostrich plumes, with tulle to match. Thus, a capote in a network of small gold beads has the strings of pale-blue tulle and is trimmed with the same material and with pale-blue ostrich tips. Hats are very varied in shape and fur is a good deal used for the trimming of the toque and bolero forms. So, too, are bands of lophophore and parrot feathers. A bolero hat in myrtle-green velvet, trimmed and bordered with bands of rich green feathers, was among the novelties prepared for the trousseau of the Princess Maria Josepha of Saxony. Very wide-brimmed hats in black velvet have the brim lined with velvet and turned up at the left side. Jet and black feathers compose the trimming of these picturesque hats. Satin combined with velvet will be the favorite style for carriage or reception costumes, and woolen materials in plain dark colors will be employed for street costumes for every-day wear. Worth is using rough navy blue cloth a good deal for the short, tight-fitting jackets that are now so popular. An exceedingly stylish, yet severely simple costume, has been prepared in his establishment for an American young lady. It is composed of a tight-fitting princesse dress in seal-brown cloth, bordered around the coat sleeves and the short skirt with wide bands of Astrakan fur in its natural shade of gray. Over this dress is to be worn a sleeveless, close-fitting jacket in the same cloth, also bordered with Astrakan. A short pelerine cape to match may be worn over the jacket on cold days, or with the dress alone in milder weather. The dress, coat and cape are lined throughout with pale-gray moire antique. The hat to be worn with this toilette is of the bolero shape in dark-brown felt finished around the brim with a band of gray Astrakan, and a small muff in brown cloth, lined with brown satin and encircled with a band of gray Astrakan, completes the toilette. Astrakan in both black and gray is a good deal employed by Worth for trimming street dresses this season. He is also employing it on the short, dressy wraps that are one of the specialities of his house. For velvet costumes he uses bands of sable or of silver-fox fur. Dark sapphire-blue and black are his preferred tints in velvet this year for out-door wear. He has just completed for a young Belgian Countess a most lovely dinner dress in myrtle-green velvet and linden-green satin, which will set off the golden hair of its future wearer to perfection. Worth is introducing some lovely new shades in velvet this season. One of these, a soft, delicate dove color, is exceedingly pretty. Ruby, myrtle green, crushed strawberry and a new, warm shade of chaudrin, will be extensively used for ball dresses.—Lucy Hooper, in N. Y. Telegram.

SCIENTIFIC HYGIENE.

The Great Advantages Derived by Its Application in the Cure of Disease.

The progress of hygienic medicine in the last fifty years is the medical fact of the present age, and the fact will stand out in boldest relief when the history of this period shall be written by some future Æsculapian scholar.

But, rapid and effective as this progress has been, the principles of hygiene are yet in their infancy. We have learned to appreciate the true value of hygienic principles in the prevention of diseases of the epidemic type; and the medical profession, throwing aside all selfish recollections, have been the first to teach the practice of these principles and to prove their force and vitality. The next step in the way of advancement is to demonstrate that the same principles are as useful and as necessary in the treatment of actual disease as they are in prevention.

A great advantage in the hygienic treatment of disease is, that it does not, or at least need not, interfere with sound and experience proved modes of treatment of a medical kind. The scientific physician finds, in fact, that there is always a consistent plan for combining the medical and hygienic systems. He sees that the two systems are one; he sees further that the mere medical plan without the hygienic is in all cases imperfect, and in some cases worse than imperfect.

The practical details of hygienic medicine in relation to the treatment of disease have, however, yet to be wrought out more fully. This will be sure work, but slow. Necessarily slow, because it is hard to give up old friendships in dogmatism; while to effect a cure in a sick man by fresh air alone, or diet, is infinitely less satisfactory to the public than to assume to effect the same cure even by a bread-pill.

It is vain, it is sticking in the slough of hopelessness, to pander to these popular weaknesses; for though they must die out, and, indeed, are dying out daily, they will go the sooner if they are effectually damped, and if something real, and common sense is put in their place. Scientiæ mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis. There is a time when medicines are invaluable; but, if faith in medicines is to be retained, the times for their administration, as well as their selection, must be learned by knowledge, not by routine, and must be dictated by the circumstances of the case, not by the caprice of the patient. The executive of medicine must be independent, if it would keep in the path of truth and advancement.—Dr. B. W. Richardson, in Popular Science Monthly.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has sustained, with slight variations, the tone and tendencies of last week except that low and medium grades of dark tobacco have been [illegible] tending upward [illegible] per 100 pounds higher than a week ago. The higher grades of dark have been scarcer and firm. Burley tobaccos have been quiet, but about steady for low grades; good mediums have been firm, and the higher grades retain the stiff tone previously noticed, [illegible] at full prices. The large manufacturers and dealers have been in steady attendance, and there has been a well sustained competition for all offerings of useful tobacco. Two boys, John Cristman and John Allen, living about twelve miles from Louisville, concluded to have some fun election day, and while the father was away from home young Cristman stole several pounds of powder. Going to an adjoining field they piled a lot of earth and stone around the powder and ignited a fuse. Before the boys could escape to a safe distance the powder exploded, and both the boys were severely wounded. Cristman was burned about the head, and it is probable will lose his eyesight. Allen had his head and skull crushed in. Recovery doubtful. Farmer Cristman is a rich and well known man.

FINLEY'S colored constituents in Hart County have issued a manifesto in which they declare that the success of their candidate is a national victory, which "means that the white child has no privileges over the colored child. It means that the colored child can now sit on the same bench with the white child." They held a public meeting at Munfordville on the evening of the 6th, to celebrate Finley's election.

AT Mt. Sterling Wm Watts, upon preliminary examination a few days ago, was held under bond of $500 upon a charge of shooting and wounding with intent to kill Mrs. Vivian Daniel. The wounding occurred several days ago. Mrs. Daniel, who is one of the most estimable ladies in the county, was thought at the time to have been fatally wounded, but has since recovered. Wesley Watts, father of Wm Watts, was held under bond of $200 as accessory before the fact. The wounding was accidental, occurring during the course of an altercation between Watts and son and Mrs. Daniel's son.

TWO UNKNOWN men, evidently tramps, were run over and killed the other morning, thirty-five miles from Cincinnati, on the L. & N. Short Line east-bound freight. The men were riding on the dead-irons when the train broke in two. Left on the front section, they attempted to jump off, and were run over by the rear section and instantly killed.

AT Henderson, the other morning, Officer Rooney shot and instantly killed a negro, James Green, in self defense. The negro residents of the city gave a ball, and as midnight approached they became noisy and turbulent. James Green, a rough, became involved in a quarrel with a stranger, and attempted to stab him, but was prevented by Rooney, who placed Green under arrest. He made a savage attack on the officer and cut him several times. Rooney at last drew his revolver and fired four times, each shot taking effect in a vital spot. This broke the dance up instantly. Rooney delivered himself up, but was not held, the shooting being plainly in defense of his own life.

THE small boy played smash with the residence of John Britton, the butcher, Newport, on "Halloween." A number of windows were destroyed, and the front door so mutilated that it will have to be replaced.

AT Henderson, the suit of the Bruckman administrators vs. Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Newark, N. J., resulted in a $5,000 verdict for the plaintiff. Most of this sum will go to Louisville creditors. Bruckman, it will be remembered, was a young tobacconist who died suddenly at Owensboro a few months ago. It was charged that he committed suicide.

AFRICAN RELICS.

Interesting Facts Related by a Returned Missionary and His Wife.

African curiosities were exhibited recently from the pulpit of the Central Presbyterian Church. Rev. W. H. Robinson and wife, returned missionaries from Africa, were their owners. Their first specimen was a cap made from a monkey skin. The cap is made with a long tail or braid hanging down the back like a Chinese cue. When the curious headdress was donned by the speaker the merriment of the children was without bounds, and they rose from their seats in a body and stood on the chairs and benches to get a view of the strange exhibition.

The speaker then attired himself in the walking-dress of the native African. This consisted of a square piece of cloth with blue background, on which were displayed grotesque floral designs with a border of bright red.

The dress is wrapped around the person a little above the waist and tucked in at the hips, leaving the neck and shoulders bare. By a little modification in the manner of wrapping the same garb is made to serve as a fashionable dress. With this principal garment a flaming red handkerchief is bound about the head, and the toilet of the African swell is complete. Men and women are dressed alike, with the exception of the hat.

"The woman's coiffure," the speaker said, "can be better explained by my wife. The hair's crispness is overcome by a heavy ointment and rolled into a series of windrows, I call them, or ridges about the head. The color of the hair is almost lost in the luxuriance of the unguent. A tiger's tooth is worn on a string around the neck as a charm. It is believed to be a talisman to lead to prosperity and guards the wearer from all harm. The women wear bells on their feet and as many brass rings or bracelets as their arms will hold. The rings are often so tight that the torture inflicted is even as great as that which fashion imposes on the fashionable women of the civilized world."

Mrs. Robinson, in speaking of the results of the missionary work in Africa, said: "The number of converts is no just criterion of the progress we have made in our work. There are, I believe, some six hundred converts all told in the station of Gaboon, but that number does not adequately represent the amount of good that has been done. There are many difficulties in the field, the trying climate, the ignorance, superstition and curious customs of the natives. Polygamy is a great evil there. The condition of women is little above that of abject serfdom." Mrs. Robinson then told in graphic style the story of a native who had been converted and was persecuted by his companions for speaking against a secret organization that to Africans is even more than a religion.—Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette.

A NEW VIEW OF CONSUMPTION.

And One Which Appeals to Common Sense. Many Curable Cases.

[illegible]

"Many persons die of Consumption who could easily be cured," says Dr. A. [illegible] Clark, of [illegible], N. Y., "if they would go at it right. I have a new view of the disease. Consumption is not always of lung origin."

"[illegible] What is it then?"

"Many cases of consumption are secondary. The disease itself prevails everywhere, but the [illegible] If a person lives in the most favorable climate in the world and has any tendency to lung weakness, if certain conditions exist in the system, that climate, however favorable, will not prevent development of the disease. The disease in such cases is only a secondary symptom in the lungs of some other ailment, and can never be cured until approached through its source."

"Yes, doctor, but what is the method of approach?"

"If you dip your finger in acid you burn it, do you not?"

"Yes."

"If you wash this burnt finger every second with the acid, what is the result?"

"Why, constant inflammation, festering and eventual destruction of the finger."

"Precisely! Now then for my method, which commends itself to the reason and judgment of every skillful practitioner. You know certain acids are developed in the body. Well, if the system is all right these acids are neutralized or utilized and carried out. If the system is run down by excesses, anxiety, continual exposure, or overwork, these acids accumulate in the blood. If there is any natural weakness in the lung, the acid attacks it, having a natural affinity for it, and if the acid is not neutralized or passed out of the system, it burns, ulcerates and finally destroys the lung. Is this clear?"

"Perfectly! But how do you prevent the accumulation of these acids in the system?"

"Irregularities of the liver and kidneys create this excess of acid and its supply can be cut off only by correcting the wrong action of these organs. The kidneys alone should carry out in quantity, in solution, enough of this acid daily, which, if left in the blood, would kill four men. When the stomach, the liver and the kidneys are all conspiring to increase the acid, the wonder is that weak lungs resist death as long as they do!"

"But you have not told us how you would treat such cases."

"No, but I will. The lungs are only diseased as an effect of this acid or kidney poison in the blood. After having exhausted all authorized remedies to correct this acid condition, I was compelled, in justice to my patients, to use Warner's safe cure, though a proprietary remedy, it is now recognized, I see, by leading physicians, by Presidents of State Boards of Health and by insurance physicians, as a scientific and the only specific for those great organs in which over ninety per cent. of diseases originate or are sustained."

"Is this form of treatment successful?"

"It is wonderfully so, and for that reason I am only too willing that you should announce it to the world of consumptives."

Note by the Publishers.—We have received the above interview from H. H. Warner & Co., Rochester, N. Y., with the request that we publish it for the good of suffering people. In a foot note to their letter they say:

"The experience of Dr. Clark is not strange to us. In our correspondence we have found that many thousands of people are suffering from what they think is Consumption, whereas the real difficulty is with the liver and kidneys, proven by the fact that when these organs are restored to health by the use of Warner's safe cure, the consumption disappears, and so does uremic or kidney poisoning, which causes so many symptoms of diseases that the human system is subject to. The same may be said of rheumatism, caused by an acid condition of the system. We insist upon what we always have claimed, if you remove the cause, the system will soon perfect the work already begun. Mrs. Rev. Dr. Theodore Wolf, of Gettysburg, Pa., wife of the editor of the Lutheran Quarterly, said her friends thought her 'far gone with Consumption' but after a thorough treatment with Warner's safe cure, she says: 'I am perfectly well.' We can cite thousands of such cases, but one is enough. If you publish the above article, kindly send us a marked copy."

[We gladly give place to the article, for if we can in any way stay the ravages of Consumption, which carries away so many millions yearly, it is our bounden duty so to do.]—PUB.

SPOILING FOR A FIGHT.

Russia Imprisons Six American Citizens.

Their Release Refused When Officially Demanded—General Boulanger's Mystifying Speech.

London, Nov. 16.—Six American citizens have been arrested in Southern Russia for preaching in an orthodox assembly of Russians. Mr. Lothrop, the United States Minister at St. Petersburg, has been endeavoring to induce the authorities to release the prisoners, but so far has been unsuccessful.

London, Nov. 15.—General Boulanger's speech has succeeded admirably in mystifying people as to whether he wants war or peace, and many are the hot discussions by statesmen of tap rooms and of the clubs. It was known that he intended a rebuke to those who attributed to him a desire for war, and the oration dwelt clearly, but without enthusiasm, on his love of peace. The result has had but little effect in changing the opinion of either side. A large number of people believe that although he desires in time of peace to prepare fully for war merely as a wise precaution, nevertheless he intends to incite a national clamor for revenge before the exhibition of 1889, and few believe in the sincerity of his alleged desire for a permanent peace which the cold, studied phrases of his speech were intended to convey.

ROW IN A BOARDING-HOUSE.

Hungry Boarders Astonished With Roast Chicken for Supper—Terrible Fight Between Seven Men Over It.

New York, Nov. 15.—A boarding-house at No. 59 Ogden street, Newark, is kept by John H. Witten, who also runs a bar, while his wife, who weighs about 250 pounds, has charge of the house. There are eight male boarders. Seven of the boarders were at the table last night, when a roast chicken was placed on the supper table. Immediately one of the boarders reached over, and, seizing the fowl, placed it on his plate. Indignant remonstrance arose, but the appropriator of the lonely fowl announced his intention to hold on to it. There were three additional chickens in the kitchen ready for the table, but before the landlady could interpose a word the boarders arose from their seats, and, seizing knives and crockery, a general fight began, some attacking the man with the fowl and others defending him. A telephone call was sent for the police, who arrived in fifteen minutes. All but two of the combatants had left the house. Thos. Campbell was found with a gash four inches long on his neck, running from his left ear to his windpipe. He was bleeding badly. John Welsh had a bad cut on his head from some instrument, both his eyes were closed, and his face had been pounded until it was a mass of bruises and cuts. The other boarders, who escaped, were said to be more or less battered. The two men were taken to the Second Precinct Police Station in an ambulance, and their wounds were dressed. They were permitted to return to the house. The dining-room was a complete wreck, even the table being broken into fragments.

Wife-Trading in North Carolina.

Chatham, N. C., Nov. 15.—A white man, Moore, was sent to the chain-gang Saturday for having traded wives with another man. When Judge Gilmer asked him what he had to say why sentence should not be passed he replied that he did not know that his act was a crime. A man came to his house with a woman who was better looking than his own wife and bantered him for a trade, so he "swapped" and paid $1.50 to boot. As this was his first "swap," he hoped that the court would impose a light sentence. The other man, who was a party to the trade, has not been apprehended.

CHICAGO ANARCHISTS.

Colonel Ingersoll Refuses to Take Up the Case—Efforts to Find a Supreme Judge.

Chicago, Nov. 15.—A letter received from Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, says that he had not the time to connect himself in any way with the case of the Anarchists, and therefore would have nothing whatever to do with it. The certificate of evidence of the bill of exceptions has at last been signed, filed and put on record in the office of the Clerk of the Criminal Court. To-morrow the paper or bale of paper will be transcripted to the Supreme Court. The defense will then proceed to reach the ear of any member of the Supreme Bench, as the Court is now in session, and from him endeavor to secure a supersedeas to restrain the execution of the sentence. At the March term of the Supreme Court the case will be called for consideration. Thus, the condemned men are respited for many months, although Mr. Grinnell has said by way of argument: "A supersedeas may not be granted"—a contingency which is, however, not to be reasonably anticipated.

BREAK IN THE LEVEE.

New Orleans, Nov. 14.—A special to the Times-Democrat from Plaquemine says: About 6 o'clock this morning over two hundred feet of the river bank, including Levee street, caved into the river. Several buildings were destroyed. This is the fifth cave-in which has taken place in the river front this season. This last cave-in has approached so near the new levee which was being built by the citizens as to render its completion useless. It is now thought that this latter cave in and the one below will continue to widen and extend until the whole business front of the river will be engulfed.

It is dated April 14, 1865, five days after the surrender of Lee. The check was delivered to Colonel Caldwell, who was the chief clerk of the Depository, during the movement from Alabama to Georgia before the victorious Federal cavalry. The latter was delivered in the woods, and before the news of Lee's surrender had reached the retreating Confederates."

The Great Discovery in Making Sugar.

Washington, Nov. 14.—Prof. Wiley, the chemist of the Agricultural Department, who is at Fort Scott, Kan., conducting an experiment in sugar-making from Louisiana sugar-cane by the diffusion process, telegraphs the Commissioner of Agriculture that his first estimate of the result was too low. He finished swinging out the second Louisiana "strike" yesterday. The yield of 83 tons of cane was 11,100 pounds, or 134 pounds per ton of "first" sugar of fine quality. This is double the yield obtained by the old milling process.

EMBEZZLER ENO.

The Biggest Crook in the Canada Colony

Preparing to Make Restitution—His Flying Trip to New York.

New York, Nov. 16.—Through the untiring efforts of an unmarried sister negotiations for settlement have been opened between friends of John C. Eno and the directors of the Second National Bank, from whom he embezzled over $[illegible]. The round millions were made good by his father, and the directors had to supply the remainder. The United States District Attorney confessed to-day to a knowledge of the negotiations, but declined to say whether or not he would quash the indictment if they were successful. A friend of the family says when Eno received a letter from his sister telling him what had been done, he took an early morning train at Montreal, and, reaching this city at night, repaired to the paternal mansion on Fifth avenue. He wore a heavy Canadian ulster and a soft felt hat. The collar of the coat was turned up, and served to completely hide his features. No one would have recognized him in that attire, and certainly none suspected him. It was said that he actually hungered for a look at the old house and the society of his family, and had taken a desperate chance. The next night he returned to Canada.

A DARING PROJECT.

An Army of One Hundred Thousand to Invade Mexico by New Year's.

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 13.—Captain Edward Friend, of the El Paso Rifles, has arrived here and opened a roll for recruits to join Cutting's filibustering expedition into Mexico. The expedition will be thoroughly organized within a month, and the insurgents will rendezvous at El Paso, from which point they will invade the Mexican Republic. The men who are being enlisted are well-known characters, desperate in the extreme, and capable of causing serious international trouble. Associated with the movement are some wealthy men of Chicago and New York, who are raising troops in this locality. Three prominent Catholic priests are also in the scheme, and one of them has gone to Rome to enlist the Pope's sympathy. The Yaqui Indians, the hostiles of Mexico, are also associated in the enterprise. Over 10,000 names are already signed, and the movement is growing so rapidly that by the first of the year an army of 100,000 will be ready to be hurled into Mexico. The plan of the new Government has been formulated. It is to be a Socialistic Republic, held in check by a strong military power. Great inducements are to be offered to the unemployed workingmen of the United States to emigrate thither.

RIOTING AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Ten Thousand People Try to Lynch the Murderer of Mamie Kelly.

San Francisco, Nov. 12.—An immense audience assembled at the Metropolitan Hall to-night to express their indignation at the murder of little Mamie Kelly, who was so cowardly shot down on Wednesday last by Alexander Goldenson. Several fiery speeches were made, which created intense excitement. After the meeting adjourned the excited crowd left the building and proceeded to the county jail, where the prisoner is confined, with the evident intention of taking him out and lynching him. Passing along the street the crowd was greatly increased in numbers, and by the time they reached their destination it numbered fully 10,000. Several attempts were made to storm the jail, but it was guarded so strongly that the police were enabled to repel the mob at each attempt. At this hour, 10 p. m., the trouble is somewhat subsiding.

Civil War in Spain.

London, Nov. 12.—A dispatch has been received from Madrid stating that a revolt against the Government is feared. Troops and artillery are moving rapidly through the city, and the War Department offices are accessible to those only who are on Government business. Catalonia is in a condition bordering on insurrection, and at Cadiz a regiment of soldiers ordered to Cuba flatly refused to embark. The Catalonians are incensed over the Anglo-Spanish treaty, which, unless modified, will be the cause of numbers joining the Carlists. Recently the Government abolished the rank of Sergeant in the army, and this act is considered by the soldiers as the cap-sheaf to the many persecutions to which they have been subjected. The Carlists, quick to see vantages, are working industriously to keep up the general agitation in military and civil circles.

DYNAMITE ON A TRAIN.

Fiendish Attempt to Blow Up a Passenger Train with Bombs.

Punxsutawney, Nov. 11.—Upon the arrival at Dubois, Pa., of the mail train north on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh railroad to-day, the car inspector, while passengers were getting on and off the cars at the depot, discovered three dynamite bombs and caps fastened under the springs of the rear coach. The bombs were carefully removed and there were many pale faces among the passengers when they learned the terrible fate they had so narrowly escaped. The train starts from Punxsutawney every morning, and it was undoubtedly at that place that the bombs were placed under the springs, as it makes only short stops between there and Dubois. It is twenty miles from the place of starting, and how it was possible for a train to run that distance over short curves with that amount of dynamite and caps under the springs of a coach is a mystery. Thirty-four persons were in the coach. Suspicion points directly to no person as the perpetrator of the deed. The matter will be thoroughly investigated by the railroad authorities and an effort made to bring the criminal to justice.

FULL NAME OR NONE.

Why a Young Lady Postponed Her Wedding for a Day.

Cincinnati, Nov. 11.—Samuel Maerbl made a strange request of Marriage License Clerk Hauser this morning. He asked that the name of a woman be changed in a marriage license. When questioned, he said he had got a marriage license Wednesday. Mr. Hauser had asked him what the woman's name was, and he said "Annie May." This name was put in the license. Yesterday he wanted the name "Schiar" added to the "Annie May" to make his sweetheart's name complete. He said that when he was ready to marry her Wednesday night she would not marry him because her full name was not in the license, and the wedding was therefore postponed.

A Death Dealing Contrivance.

San Francisco, Nov. 11.—S. D. Mollanoff, a Russian resident of this city, claims he has invented a nitro-glycerine bomb. He says he has discovered a liquid with which nitro-glycerine may by mixed making it non-explosive, that, by adding another chemical, the nitro-glycerine is transformed to its original state. He uses a double shell, the inside one containing the non-explosive mixture of nitro-glycerine and the outer one containing a chemical which liberates the pure nitro-glycerine. Major-General Howard says the invention is worth looking into. Other officers have pronounced favorably upon it. The French Minister of War has sent for details to experiment on the invention.

A Knife in His Head.

Cleveland, O., Nov. 11.—The horrible spectacle was witnessed at the Central Market to-day of a man running through a crowd with a knife sticking in his head, and the blood streaming down his face and saturating his garments. He ran two blocks, when a policeman pulled out the knife and summoned a physician. The man may recover. He is Henry Lindsia. He and a companion going to work met two drunken men who picked a fight with them, in which one of the roughs drove a knife into Lindsia's skull an inch and then ran away. Lindsia, maddened with pain, was with difficulty captured and the knife drawn out.

Circuit Court, to-day announced the decision of his colleagues on that bench in the case of the United States vs. American Bell Telephone Company, in which the Court decided that it had no jurisdiction over the Bell Telephone Company, and that the suit against them must be dismissed without prejudice. The decision does not include the local companies, but it is doubtful whether the suit pending against them will ever be prosecuted.

He states, however, that the decision as to his acceptance rests with his father, the King of Denmark, and adds that other duties may prevent his accepting the rulership of Bulgaria. The Prince's reply is considered to presage his refusal of the throne. The Danish papers generally advise Prince Waldemar to refuse the Bulgarian throne.

THE PACKERS BACK DOWN.

They Rescind Their Resolution to Refuse Employment to Knights of Labor, but Will Hold Out for the Ten-Hour Day—The Stock Yards Garrisoned by Over a Thousand Armed Men.

Chicago, Nov. 11.—The first overtures toward a settlement of the great strike at the Stock Yards were made quietly yesterday by the packers rescinding the resolution never again to employ Knights of Labor or union men until they resigned from those organizations. The situation at the yards remained unchanged throughout the day, the action of the packers not having been heard of until late at night. The employes of the large houses were paid off, and this, added to the prevalent despondency among the strikers over the hopelessness of their case, was productive of much more general intoxication than has yet been noticed, but notwithstanding disturbances were less frequent than on either Monday or Tuesday.

Representatives of all the packing firms met in the directors' room of the Board of Trade upon an urgent call yesterday. The meeting was private, but, like most private meetings of these days, it was only semi-private. This much became evident. The chief Knight of Labor representative in the city had met some one of the packers, authorized to speak for all the rest, and there had taken place between them a general discussion of the situation. That discussion had reached a conclusion on two points. One was that the packers at their last meeting had struck a blow at the whole organization of Knights. The other was that, in turn, the boycott on Chicago meats had been ordered or was about to be. From these two points the two representatives argued out the question. Now there has been two results. One is the action taken by the Packers' Association and the other is the action taken by the Knights.

At the meeting of the packers yesterday a series of resolutions was adopted setting forth that inasmuch as the packers had become convinced that the resolutions adopted at a recent meeting declaring that no man would be employed by them unless he severed his connection with labor organizations were unjust to numerous persons who are members of such organizations, those resolutions should be rescinded, and the following resolutions be adopted as being more in accord with the mutual interest of the employers and employed, to-wit:

"Whereas, The packers are confronted with the fact that their employes are repeatedly leaving their employment without notice to them and to the great detriment of their business, which is of such a nature as to require constant prosecution and careful attention, therefore,

"Resolved, That while we will not exclude from employment the members of such organizations, we will exercise the right to employ and discharge whom we please and conduct our business on the ten-hour plan and according to our best interests."

The action taken or yet to be taken by the head and front of the strikers, it was hinted last night, would be that inasmuch as the packers had recognized the Knights of Labor and rescinded their former resolution against that order, and inasmuch as the strike had been precipitated by the local authorities against the wishes of Mr. Barry, the chief representative of Mr. Powderly, now in the city, the strike has been or will be declared off, and all the old hands ordered back to work. The packers, it has been said, stick to the ten-hour principle, this having been conceded to them on the ground that they will withdraw their boycott on the Knights of Labor, the Knights in turn to withdraw their proposed boycott on the product of the Chicago packing houses.

Another view of the case, suggested by a friend of the packers last evening, is that the packers became convinced that their resolution of the previous day was wrong in principle, and that many members of various labor unions or other organizations might have paid in money for benevolent or insurance purposes which their resignation would annul. For these reasons the resolutions were rescinded and the new ones substituted.

In accordance with the determination reached by General Fitz Simons Tuesday, a special order was issued from brigade headquarters at the Stock Yards that the commanding officer of the First Cavalry detail one troop of the command to join the two regiments at the yards, the troop to ship their horse equipments and come fully armed and equipped for service, carrying carbines and revolvers with rounds of ball cartridges and twenty rounds of revolver amunition. In accordance with the order, Colonel Jacobs detailed Troop D, consisting of fifty men under Captain Ole Hough, belonging to his command, and dispatched them to the yards. With this latest addition the brigade is now complete and fully equipped for any emergency that can possibly arise. The Gatling gun stands in the yard covered with heavy canvass, and under the immediate eye of a guard, ready for use when the call comes, but that is among the least of the expectations.

The number of men now making it their special business to preserve the peace is 1,075, classified as follows:

Brigade officers	7
First Regiment infantry	415
Second Regiment infantry	243
First cavalry	42
Deputy sheriffs	326
Town of Lake police	42
Total	1,075

All of the packing houses were in operation yesterday, and the number of employes was visibly increased. New men, hired at the city offices of the various firms, were sent down from time to time during the day by scores and by hundreds.

New York, Nov. 11.—The wholesale butchers of Washington market say they do not believe that there will be any real attempt made by the Western packers to bring cattle East and then kill them, and in that opinion they agree with the representatives in this city of the Western packers. One wholesale butcher said he understood that about 300 oxen had been killed and dressed in New Jersey this week for a Western packer. The report, however, could not be verified. The men who actually kill and dress the cattle here are all union men, and they will not kill any cattle for the Western packers so long as the strike lasts, and if any wholesale dealers here or any where East attempts to assist the Western packers by arranging for their cattle to be killed here a strike of all the union butchers would immediately be ordered. The agents of the Chicago packers say that a car-load of cattle may be killed for Western packers here and there in some of the towns along the route to supply the local trade.

FASHION LETTER.

New Styles in Fall and Winter Goods—Something About Bonnets.

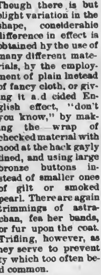
[New York Special Correspondence.]

Fashionable modistes are all busy preparing winter outfits consisting of English homespun and English serge tailor-made suits for utility wear, more elaborate costumes of cheviot, camel's hair tweed and the like, combined with plush or velvet for church, visiting and similar uses; the costumes of velvet for full dress occasions made long or short to suit individual taste, style of figure and age. Corded silk of the softest texture striped with bands of velvet is very fashionably used upon handsome gowns of plain dove gray, dark blue or golden brown armure, tricot or camel's hair. The groundwork of the striped silk which forms the panels, etc., invariably corresponds in hue with the tint of the woolen goods with which it is combined.

The guard's colors promise to be as fashionable as ever this season, and red and deep Russian blue bids fair to become almost a uniform in itself, so popular has the combination grown. This mixture, known as the Princess of Wales' colors, shows itself this autumn in every sort of fabric from serge to satin, and from the plainest morning dress to the most magnificent evening and reception toilets. Ecru and golden brown are also highly favored, these colors showing themselves particularly among elegant church costumes, made with a jacket or polonaise of golden brown plush. French polonaises, with the bodice fastening from left to right across the chest, are seen upon the latest models in overdresses. They conform admirably with the fashion of raising the skirt of the polonaise high on one side. Those Jersey-shaped garments necessitate a sloping seam down the center of the front to secure a perfect fit.

VISITING COSTUMES.

Other new polonaises from an English house show the fronts cut away, revealing a moliere waistcoat beneath. At each side are draperies almost in panier effects, being suitable for slender women only. For stouter figures are models which show the form at each side of the front extending into wide panels which are variously trimmed with jetted applique bands, feather trimming, natural beaver, blue fox and other handsome furs. En suite with these in many instances are tiny muffs of velvet decorated to correspond, ready for use later on. Braids and galloons, woven, braided, beaded and embroidered, continue in vogue and appear in the guise of bretelles on corsages around the lower edge of the basque, at the wrists of sleeves, and extending up the seam, as a bordering on skirts and overskirts, and finally, the richest and most striking designs are used to define panels and tabliers on skirts and for ornamenting wrappings of every description. A propos of outside garments, the marquise jacket, made of finely plaited or shaggy cloth, with its velvet revers, and deep collar, is one of the most popular shapes among the season's livery. The coat can be worn opened or fastened closely to the throat as taste or the requirements of the weather may decide. The fronts are half-loose even when the jacket is buttoned, but the back fits very closely and the entire garment is several inches longer than most of the jackets worn last spring. Though there is but slight variation in the shape, considerable difference in effect is obtained by the use of many different materials, by the employment of plain instead of fancy cloth, or giving it a decided English effect, "don't you know," by making the wrap of checked material with hood at the back gayly lined, and using large bronze buttons instead of smaller ones of gilt or smoked pearl. There are again trimmings of astrachan, feather bands, or fur upon the coat. Trifling, however, as these varieties are, they serve to prevent that tiresome similarity which too often becomes monotonous and common.



WALKING JACKET.

PROMENADE CLOAK.

Skirts exceedingly full at the back are still holding their sway both here and abroad, but it is still matter of congratulation that the absurdly bouffant crinoline is kept in abeyance on this side of the water. It is true that many of the best-dressed women wear the tournure, but instead of ungainly steel they content themselves with box-plaited folds of very stiff muslin or crinoline fastened low on the inside of the dress skirt on the back. It is considered exceedingly bad taste to wear the tournure high up to the waist.

In new millinery wares are close, graceful cottage bonnets, whose pretty shapes are almost spoiled by the towering trimmings built upon the fronts. These do not suit long slender faces, and the only way to render them satisfactory is to purchase the little velvet or felt bonnet, and then order the trimmings to be lowered to render the bonnet a thing of beauty, sure to prove becoming. The new fishwife poke is chic, natty and stringless, and has a full puffed brim of velvet, a round soft crown, and is trimmed with beaded aigrette loops of satin and velvet Picot ribbon. The bonnet is made of all the rich full shades in russet and golden brown, ruby, moss green, etc. One pretty model is made of dark wine velvet trimmed, with a net work of pink and ruby beads and a cluster of pink ostrich tips drooping over the full puffed velvet brim.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Western stocks of tobacco was reduced by [illegible] hhds in October against [illegible] in October, 1885. The Louisville stock was reduced [illegible] hhds and the Cincinnati stock by only 1,[illegible] hhds., though the Louisville receipts were the larger. The action of the market has been comparatively very healthy, the demand being general and sales being made at full and nearly even prices all around. The rapid reduction of stocks and the prospective continuance of the protracted embargo which the weather has been keeping on stocks in country barns have kept the market in favor of sellers, but not more than to the degree of keeping prices in the outside limits of quotations. There was a good, steady demand for medium and low grade Burleys at full prices, while the scant offerings of the better grades have been constantly met with spirited competition. Low and medium grades of dark and heavy tobaccos of shipping kinds have been active, and occasionally with variations in selling favor, and Green redried leaf has also faired better; but for these classes the advance of [illegible]c in prices noticed last week covers the sales of this week. Favorable reports of the condition of tobacco in barns are being received. We quote 1886 tobacco as follows for full weight packages:

The farmers of Daviess County have began marketing their tobacco. There has been a large crop raised this year. The highest price paid by Owensboro tobacconists so far was six dollars for leaf and one dollar for trash. A large amount of tobacco raised in the county has been frost-bitten, which will bring the price of sound tobacco up some.

Nathan and James Farris, store-keepers of Blueline, Bullitt County, went to Louisville a few days ago to attend to some business. They drank considerable whisky while in the city, and then started home in a drenching rain. When about four miles from the city they halted and James went into the half-way house of Jacob Fried to get warm. Nathan was too drunk to leave the wagon. Some time afterward James went out to look after his cousin, Nathan, when he found him stone dead. It is thought the man died from exposure.

Mr. John Fitzpatrick, a well-known citizen of the Howard's Mills neighborhood, near Owingsville, met with a serious and probably a fatal accident the other evening. Riding along the road toward his home, horseback, his horse took fright and started to run, the first sudden jump throwing the rider to the ground, and with one foot in a stirrup he was dragged a considerable distance, the animal going at his best speed. The gentleman was badly bruised about the head and shoulders, and, at last accounts, was in a very critical condition.

Ion Petuska, a Pole, has been the object of a great deal of curiosity in the West end of Louisville of late. He first made his appearance several days ago, when he visited the Seventeenth-street market, and devoured in the presence of a crowd of the curious four pounds of raw meat. Since then he has visited the market every morning and feasted on the "butchers' scraps," picked up off the ground. He feeds like a ravenous wolf, and his unkempt hair and beard, his ferocious eye and savage countenance give him the appearance of a wild man. He can speak English imperfectly, but refuses to talk about himself further than to give his name and nationality. Whence he comes or whither he goes no one has yet been able to determine. The butchers think he is some poor, half-starved fugitive, who is either unable or unwilling to work. He is another man with a history.

Mrs. John Dewberry, the widow of a well-known ward politician and saloon-keeper, who died several months ago, came to the front the other morning with a remarkable story. She dreamed that the spirit of her lamented lord appeared to her and told her to go to a certain spot in the back yard of his old saloon premises, where she would find a buried treasure. She went to the spot indicated in company with a veracious reporter, and there, sure enough, upon digging into the ground, she found an old flower-pot containing twelve $20 gold pieces. This is a true story, however strange it may seem, and Mrs. Dewberry, who is a simple old woman, will swear to it.

A young man named William Robinson, about twenty-seven years of age, employed in getting out saw-logs about twelve miles east of Henderson, met with a fatal accident a few days since. He was assisting several other men in rolling a log on a wagon, when the chain broke, and before he could get out of the way the log struck and knocked him down, rolling over and crushing him in a frightful manner, causing almost instant death.

James Metcalfe, living on the north side of Rough river, near State Ripple, while shoeing a horse, a few days ago, the animal suddenly reared up, and, coming down, stepped upon him, breaking three ribs and cutting an ugly gash in his head. His condition was serious at last reports.

The tobacco men in a number of counties in the growing districts have held meetings for the purpose of taking action regarding the outrageous methods employed by the city warehouses in selling crops shipped there by individuals and buyers. Very few people know what thievery exists, and it is only when their eye-teeth have been cut by actual experience do they begin to comprehend that in all the ratscally arrangements they have been the victims of, the tobacco warehouse manipulations cap the climax, sailing as it does, under the head of legitimate business. Many who ship do not understand how it is that a large portion of the crop is required to pay seemingly useless expenses, and while they storm about it they are not profited except by experience. To illustrate a case in point we note the shipment of a farmer of this county not long ago. He had always sold his crop at home, but, this year determined to sell on the "breaks." After carefully sorting his crop, which was a very good one, he prized it in eleven hogsheads and shipped to the market. It is hardly worth while to say in what city, for both are alike. When he went to the market to sell he explained what class of crop he had, and stated that he had been offered such a price for it. When the tobacco was offered the trash and common tobacco sold high, within seventy-five cents of the best qualities. A very low price was offered for the best tobacco. The average price of it all was about one-half what he had been offered at home, and so he rejected the sale of the best tobacco and accepted the sale of the common grades. He was not aware that under the rules of the warehouse when he rejected the price of one hogshead, the buyer had the privilege of rejecting the purchase of the other ten, and the seller had to pay $22 rejection fees, $2 for each hogshead. This was his experience however, and in addition, the ten-pound sample taken from each hogshead was not returned, the bidder stating that he boxed the samples up and sent them away. It is very evident to any reasoning mind that this purchaser endeavored to almost steal the crop of tobacco by offering a bait in the way of big prices for the common tobacco, while the price for the good was nothing like its value. If the shipper had the right to accept the prices offered for the common tobacco and reject the sale of any single hogshead he would have been on equal footing, and could have made the sale somewhat profitable to what it resulted under the existing rules. Before the shipper finally disposed of his crop he had lost 220 pounds of tobacco as samples, paid $44 rejection fees, and his expenses of two trips to the city in offering, and finally so annoyed was he over the entire matter that he left orders with the house to sell whenever the first good day came. That day came when the warehouse saw an opportunity to make the sale profitable to itself, and the shipper finally received about one-half of the actual value of his tobacco. This is usually the experience of new-beginners on the breaks, and the old sellers reap about the same harvest. There is not a shipper in this entire section that has been in the business constantly for ten years, but has lost their time and money, and are in no wise benefitted financially, while the warehousemen have coined money every year. When the rejection fees, the samples, selling fees, and other "incidentals" are considered, and it is understood that whenever a hogshead of tobacco is offered that these charges are bound to be collected; then it will be an easy matter to see how it is that the warehouses are always "right side up with care." It is a plain unvarnished system of robbery, and as long as the growers and shippers permit it to continue they will be the ones to suffer the consequences. The growers and shippers in every county ought to hold meetings at their county-seat and take the same action as the Owen County Tobacco Association, published in these columns some time ago. The power and influence that this great number of agriculturists could exercise if united in an association, would be sufficient to bring the warehousemen to any terms reasonable and desirable. Gallatin has taken a great interest in this matter, and her growers ought to take steps at once for their protection.

Crop Reports.

Tobacco will be fully 90 per cent of an average crop. Cut and housed in good condition, from 5 to 10 per cent reported more or less injured by frost. The greatest damage by frost done to this crop was in the Southern and Western portions of the State, with the [illegible] variety.

[illegible] The condition of this crop is 90 and average 90 per cent. [illegible] fall average, [illegible] 75 per cent up to quantity, with a light crop of [illegible]. Potatoes: Condition [illegible] average [illegible]. A full crop of sorghum and garden products. Many farmers feeding the sorghum cane to their live stock, claiming it to be equal to corn, oats and hay combined, as food for horses, mules and cattle.

Apples rotted and dropped from the trees more than one-half and the bulk of those on hand, it is thought, will not keep well. The Ben Davis variety is reported to be in the best condition.

Live stock is reported in good condition, except a little hog cholera in several counties. Horses and mules are dying in some localities in Warren county and cattle in Henderson county. The disease with the horses and mules, it is thought, was caused from drinking stagnant pond water, and the cattle from eating the stalks of dry weeds, the effect being similar to that of eating the remains of the corn stalk after being chewed and spit out by hogs.

THE EXEMPTION LAW.

Action of the late Legislature in Regard to Regulating the Exemption of Personal Property, Attachments, Etc.

The last Legislature passed and the Governor approved an important amendment to the Exemption laws of Kentucky, the provisions of which amended law are not generally understood. Owing to its very general importance, it is reproduced herewith:

An act regulating the exemption of personal property from execution, attachment, distress for rent and fee-bills in this Commonwealth.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That the following property shall be exempt from execution, attachment, distress or fee bill, namely: Two work beasts, or one work beast and one yoke of oxen, two plows and gear, one wagon and one set of gear, or cart, or dray, two axes, three hoes, one spade, one shovel, two cows and calves, beds, bedding and furniture sufficient for family use, one loom and spinning-wheel and pair of cards, all the spun yarn and manufactured cloth, manufactured by the family necessary for family use, carpeting for all family rooms in use, one table, all books not to exceed $50 in value, two saddles and their appendages, two bridles, six chairs, or so many as shall not exceed $10 in value; one cradle, all the poultry on hand, ten head of sheep not to exceed $25 in value, all wearing apparel, sufficient provisions, including breadstuff and animal food to sustain the family for one year, if not on hand, other personal property, money or growing crop not to exceed $40 in value for each member of the family; provender suitable for live stock, if there be any such stock, not to exceed $70 in value, and if such provender be not on hand, such other property as shall not exceed such sum in value; all washing apparatus not to exceed $50 in value; all arms, ammunition and equipments of a militiaman; one sewing-machine and all family portraits and pictures, one cooking stove and appendages, and other cooking utensils, not to exceed in value $25.

Sec. 2. That a work beast exempted under this act shall not exceed in value $150, and a cow and calf under it shall not exceed in value $50. If the officer making the levy [illegible] animals when levied upon exceed said respective sums in value, or if the plaintiff in the writ [illegible] the officer demand it, the officer shall have the animal appraised by two disinterested housekeepers of the county, one to be selected by the officer and the other by the defendant, and in case of a disagreement then the two shall select a third, who shall be sworn by the officer to discharge the duties of appraiser as required by law in the appraisement of real estate to be sold under execution; and if it shall appear by such appraisement such animals have a greater value than the amounts above specified, then such animals shall be sold and the defendant allowed out of the proceeds of the sale of such animal the sums above specified respectively. The officer shall return the appraisement with the writ under which he was acting.

Sec. 3. The tools, not exceeding one hundred dollars in value, of any mechanic are exempt from levy under execution, attachment, distress for rent or fee bills. If, however, a mechanic claims the benefit of this section, there shall be but one work beast exempt in his favor. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section the officer making the levy shall, before he proceeds to sell, ascertain by the judgment of two discreet, disinterested housekeepers, selected and sworn by him, the value of the tools, and set apart for the defendant such as may be selected by him or his agent, not to exceed in amount one hundred dollars, and may sell the residue. If there be not more than that amount in value, then all the tools shall be set apart for the defendant; a list of the tools so set apart shall be returned by the officer with the process.

Sec. 4. The libraries of all ministers of the Gospel and the professional libraries of attorneys at law, the professional libraries and instruments of physicians and surgeons not to exceed in value five hundred dollars shall be exempt from execution, attachment, distress for rent or fee bills, provided that such ministers, lawyers, physicians and surgeons shall be entitled to only one work beast and to no wagon, cart or dray.

Sec. 5. The wages, not to exceed fifty dollars, of all persons who work for wages shall be exempt from execution, attachment, distress for rent, garnishment, or fee bills. Provided the exemption of fifty dollars shall not apply to debts contracted for food, raiment or house rent for the family.

Sec. 6. The exemption mentioned in this act shall apply only to persons with a family resident in this Commonwealth, and shall be in force from and after the 1st day of June, 1886, and to all debts contracted before that time the present law of exemption shall apply.

Sec. 7. All other laws and parts of laws relating to the exemption of personal property from execution attachment distress for rent, or fee bills in this Commonwealth are hereby repealed.

The wife and daughter of Thomas Graves left Wednesday morning to join him in Petersburg which will in future be their home. We regret, exceedingly to lose this most estimable family. Living in and near town as they have for so many years, they have endeared themselves to our citizens to an extraordinary degree, and will sorely be missed socially, and by their church people as well as by their relatives. Mrs. Graves has also been identified with all the charitable movements, the temperance organizations &c., of the town, and her highest ambition seemed to be found in sharing her blessings with others, so that especially by the poor and unfortunate will she be missed. Miss Katie has always been one of our most popular young ladies, her sweet smile and kindly, gracious manner wins all hearts and she will in returning to Boone, the home of her childhood, find a welcome ready made for her. Mrs. Jennie Willis, the other charming member of this household, we hope, will remain in our midst, having become quite popular since her coming amongst us recently. COMMITTEE.

Died.

WHITE.—On the 11th inst., about 9 o'clock p. m., at her home about one and a half miles from Burlington, on the Bellevue pike, Mrs. Sidney White, wife of Richard White, and daughter of Mr. R. E. Bruce, of Burlington.

Mrs. White was born and raised in the neighborhood where she died, and by her cheerful and Christian disposition she had endeared herself to all who knew her. For several years she had been an intense but patient sufferer with a trouble that baffled medical skill, and, though recognizing that she was upon the threshold of the great hereafter, that same cheerfulness of spirit remained with her until the last. Mrs. White was a member of the Universalist church in Burlington and was a consistent and conscientious member to whom the entire local membership of the church was greatly attached. By her request Rev. Mr. Barker officiated in a brief funeral service at the grave in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends, who, in spite of the very unpleasant weather, assembled at the grave to pay the last and sad tribute of respect to the deceased. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of all who knew his estimable wife.

A suit has been filed in the United States Court in Covington which is exciting considerable excitement. It is by Belle M. Hughes, of Denver, Colorado, against Wm. [illegible] and twenty-one others. She claims that she is the owner of ten thousand acres of land in [illegible] county, Ky., and that the above defendants are in possession of it and refuse to vacate. The land is valuable, and some of the defendants claim that their ancestors purchased the land from his wife, Daniel Boone, during the dark and bloody days."

John McGowan, a well known citizen of Rising Sun, was found dead in his bed Wednesday morning at 7 o'clock. For some time previously he had been suffering from nervous prostration, the effects of a protracted spree and had been attended by Drs. Alden and Craig. Monday McGowan was down in town, his condition apparently much improved. Tuesday he was not seen on the streets, and at the coroner's inquest it was developed that all day Tuesday he had suffered from nervous spasms and no word had been sent to his physician. At dark Tuesday McGowan's wife, who a few days before had instituted proceedings for divorce, locked the house up and went to the home of one of her neighbors to spend the night, leaving him alone. Returning about 7 o'clock in the morning she found him in the cold embrace of death. The evidence showed that McGowan had been grossly neglected while ill, and Coroner Harris rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts. Coincident with the coroner's inquest on the body of John McGowan, Wednesday morning, Judge Bainbridge was giving his decision granting a decree of divorce in the case of Catharine McGowan vs. John McGowan. A messenger arrived and announced the death of the defendent, when R. L. Davis, the petitioner's attorney, moved a dismissal of the case, which his Honor did and ordered that no entry of the case be made on the records.—Rising Sun Local.

When the Democrat went to press last week the trial of George Long and Mrs. Hunton was in progress before Judge Donaldson. They are the parties who have been living on a shanty boat along the river here for some time, and who were arrested by Marshal Jos. Myrick and deputy-marshal Roger Williams on the charge of murdering Charles Gorden, in this county, about the first of October, the body of the latter having been found floating in the river at Madison, about the 10th of that month. The circumstances relied upon by the prosecution were very remote, while the accused proved an alibi by several witnesses. The case was argued for the Commonwealth by County Attorney, D. M. Bridges, in a speech of great power which covered the whole ground, and used the circumstances for all they were worth. M. L. Downs, Esq., conducted the defense—how skillfully we are not able to say, not hearing him, but he got the parties clear, and that is the best criterion. Judge Donaldson made an excellent analysis of the testimony, and after removing all immaterial and irrelevant matter from the case, left it clear that there was no real, legal or sufficient cause for holding the accused until Circuit Court. He accordingly dismissed them. At this juncture Mr. Bridges moved that the parties be held over for adultery, whereupon the case was continued until Monday to allow for preparation to meet the charge. On Monday the Commonwealth was unable to make out her case and the defendents were dismissed. Having had their large fire-arms and their small fire-arms, their weapons and "trix" of various kinds restored to them, the aforesaid Long and his close companion and confidential advisor (who has a husband in Boone county, and four children with her) marched down street side by side; and entering their shanty boat, they at once left, with valorous discretion, for other parts.—Carrollton Democrat.

There is more game, rabbits especially, in this vicinity than for years. Mr. Editors get Garnett, Tolin and Baker (tell Garnett and Tolin to bring their specks so they can find them setting) to come down and we will go gunning for some of them.

Patrick was 75 years old and was known to almost every person in the county, he was also a school teacher in this county, and the following is one of the words he would give out to be spelled—Transmagullicandubobandancilality.

Frank Dorman, a well known Democrat to many a Kentuckian along the border, was defeated for Auditor of Dearborn county, Ind., by E. D. Moore a Republican. THE COMBINATION FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

[illegible] THE OPPRESSED.

What the Democracy, During Its Short Term of Power, Has Done to Restore the Land for the People Which Has Been Unjustly Donated to Corporations by the Republican Party.

John G. Carlisle, Speaker of the House of Representatives and one of the most prominent and eloquent of American statesmen, lately delivered a powerful address to his fellow citizens of Covington, Ky., from which the following extract is taken:

The policy of the Government of the United States in relation to the disposition of the public lands is of very great importance to [illegible] of the people [illegible] Illinois Central Railroad Company. In making this statement, gentlemen, Mr. Blaine [illegible] ought to know very well that the Democratic party never made any land grant to the Illinois Central Railroad Company or any other railroad company. In 1850 Congress passed an act granting about 2,600,000 acres of land, not to the railroad company, but to the State of Illinois for all the people of that great State. With this land the State of Illinois succeeded in having constructed 1,000 miles of railroad within the Central Illinois Railroad Company, for which the company agreed to pay into the treasury of the State every year a certain percentage on net earnings, and under this contract the people of Illinois have already received about [illegible], and are receiving every year a large part of the revenue required to defray the expenses of their State Government.

This, then, was not a grant to any private corporation, but a grant of land to the State of Illinois for the benefit of all its tax-payers. They received one mile of railroad for every 1,[illegible] acres of land. But in 1862, for the first time in the legislation of this country, the policy was inaugurated by a Republican Congress of granting your public lands to private corporations. There had been, up to that time, granted to twelve of the States for the purpose of enabling them to construct or assist in constructing railroads about 25,000,000 acres of land, and they succeeded in having constructed out of the proceeds of this land 10,[illegible] miles of railroad, or one mile for each 2,[illegible] acres of land. When our Republican friends took control by acts passed from 1862 to 1871, when there was scarcely a Democratic vote in either branch of Congress, they granted to nine great railroad companies 83,884,[illegible] acres of land. These companies constructed under these acts 4,251 miles of railroad, or one mile of railroad only for each 7,781 acres of your public lands. These companies, according to their own reports, have sold those lands at an average price of $5 per acre. At this price they received for each mile of railroad constructed by them, $38,930. In addition to this, the Government issued its bonds, bearing interest payable semi-annually, to the amount of $64,623,512, and delivered them to six of these same companies, upon which the Government has been paying interest every six months from that time to this, so that to-day these six great corporations are indebted to the people of the United States more than $100,000,000. So that the Government gave to them in its own bonds at par, to say nothing of the interest, $25,161 for every mile of road constructed. Therefore, they have received from the Government $38,930 in lands for each mile of road constructed, and $2[illegible],460 in bonds for each mile of road constructed; so that they have received altogether in bonds and lands $64,260 for every mile of road constructed. And yet our Republican friends profess to be the friends of the working people of this country—profess to be in favor of restoring this land to the public domain, and preserving these lands for homes for the people.

Gentlemen, I speak by the record when I tell you up to the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress, over whose deliberations it was my fortune to preside, not one acre of the public land had been restored to the people. [Applause.] In addition to the nine railroad companies about which I have spoken, there was a large number of others claiming grants under various acts of Congress, passed by our Republican friends, claiming about 110,000,000 acres of lands, besides those to which I have referred, making an area five times as large as the whole State of Kentucky. These companies claiming those 110,000,000 acres had not constructed their roads within the time required by Congress, yet when I went into that chair on the first Monday of December, 1883, not one solitary acre of these one hundred and ten millions had been restored to the people to whom they belonged.

A Committee on Public Lands was appointed, which at once began a thorough investigation of these subjects, and the result is that up to the present time we have succeeded in forfeiting and restoring to the public domain, by acts which have passed both houses of Congress, 50,482,000 acres, or 78,878 square miles of territory, twice as large a tract as the whole State of Kentucky. [Applause.] This amount of your public lands, which was wrongfully claimed by these railroad companies, we have now succeeded in restoring to the people, to whom they belong, during one Congress and half of another. Besides this, gentlemen, we have passed through the House of Representatives bills forfeiting and restoring to the public domain 38,430,941 acres, which the Senate has not yet agreed to, making an area of 60,128 square miles. And there are now on the calendar of the House, with favorable report of the Committee on Public Lands, awaiting action of the House next session, bills forfeiting about 23,000 square miles more. And thus we expect to go on, if we succeed in retaining control of the House of Representatives, in the execution of this policy of justice and right to the people until every acre of land improperly granted away and improperly held by private corporations shall be restored to the public domain and kept for homesteads for the people. A single bill passed by the House at a recent session proposes to restore to the public domain over thirty-six million acres of land which the House claims have not been earned by the railroad companies now claiming it, but the Senate has refused to concur in it; in other words, has agreed to it with such an amendment as will make the bill forfeit only two or three million acres of land, giving to the railroad company about thirty-two million to which it is not entitled.

"IT OUGHT TO BE BAD."

Thus Mr. Blaine Reason's About the Country's Prosperity, and He Therefore Refuses to Face the Facts.

The American Grocer contains some "nuts for croakers to crack" in the form of an array of facts illustrating the movement of trade during the present year. It is not likely that the mouths of all the croakers will be stopped, but the indications of a continuance of conditions promising indefinite business prosperity will leave the people with little inclination to listen to their dismal predictions. Send the croakers to the rear, and make the best of our business chances, is likely to be the watchword.—Troy Times (Rep.)

I was especially requested to state that while the Democratic party was in power National prosperity continued, and that the warnings of Republican orators of danger to the industrial system of the country because of Democratic supremacy had been falsified. I have in my life heard many definitions of what constituted the height of impudence, but here is a practical exemplification of it. Fortunately for the Republican party it is not possible, however, to obliterate current history.—JAMES G. BLAINE.

What a contrast is here presented between the frank acknowledgment of a fact apparent to every business man throughout the land by a representative Republican organ and the pitiful quibbling and misrepresentation by a representative Republican leader. Mr. Blaine, according to the reasoning of the Times, must be classed with the croakers whose dismal predictions it very properly rebukes. The trouble with Mr. Blaine is that like the Bourbons, experience is lost upon him. He pinned his faith, in 1884, to the effect of the dismal predictions of himself and his brother croakers on the public mind. Then he endeavored to convey the impression that the election of a Democratic President meant financial ruin to the Nation. Business interests would be paralyzed; enterprise a thing of the past, and universal bankruptcy an inevitable result. Time, which sets all things right, has proved the utter falsity of those predictions. The Democratic Administration has been in existence but a year and a half and what is the result? A flowing tide of business prosperity such as has not been seen for years; prospects still brighter in every channel of trade; confidence restored, enterprise unchecked and launching forth into great ventures which it would not have dreamed of before the present Administration went into power, and joy and cheerful expectation visible on the face of every business man.

But Mr. Blaine shuts his eyes to this fair prospect and insists that the Democratic party will ruin the country. What cares he for the unassailable statistics of business prosperity which every Republican paper in the country is forced to publish? He forgets that the Democratic Administration has been tried and found admirably adapted to the [illegible] of trade. He ignores [illegible] economical government [illegible] adopted, constitutes no unimportant factor in the present business revival being a beacon of hope and encouragement to capital and labor. No such an acknowledgment would suit his purpose. He has made the assertion on the stump and by letter that Democratic rule and business prosperity were incompatible, and he means to stick to it, no matter how ridiculous he may appear. It is an unpleasant position, almost as much so as when he was confronted with the Mulligan-Fisher letters. It is hard to fight facts and Mr. Blaine can not be expected to escape the penalty of those who engage in such a foolish business.

Mr. Blaine's besetting weakness is in seeing things, not as they are, but as he would like them to be. He can not realize that what he so confidently predicted in the campaign of 1884 has not come to pass. In this he is like the man who unexpectedly met a friend in the street and greeted him with the following: "How is this? I read an account of your death in the paper." "Well," returned his friend, "you see I am still alive." "But," persisted the other, "the account was very circumstantial and the paper is wholly reliable." Mr. Blaine has declared that business would die if the Democrats came into power. Therefore, business is dead. It is an opinion as is an opinion. Bunsby could say no more.—Albany Argus.

MR. CLEVELAND'S HONESTY.

A Characteristic Indorsement on the Record of a Federal Official Who Thought the President's Order Amounted to Nothing.

The suspensions of District Attorneys in one day for flagrant violations of the President's order forbidding officials to take an active part in political campaigns are the best possible proofs of the sincere purpose behind that order. Upon the record of M. E. Benton's contumacy President Cleveland indorsed "Let this officer be suspended at once." Benton is a Democrat, and the United States District Attorney for the Western district of Missouri. Unmindful of the President's order he was making a regular stumping tour of his State, with appointments advertised for nearly every evening up to the eve of election. He can keep his appointments now, but it will not be at the expense of the United States. William A. Stone, United States District Attorney for the Western district of Pennsylvania, Republican, suffered for a like offense.

These examples were necessary to vindicate the sincerity of the President, which has never been questioned by the people, although the object of continuous partisan sneers. Here in Chicago the Federal officials are paying strict attention to the business for which they draw salaries, in very marked contrast with the conduct of their predecessors under the last Republican Administration.

Doubtless the President finds it difficult to draw the line where the legitimate freedom of political activity is limited by the service due and the time paid for out of the public treasury. But his prompt action in the cases of Benton and Stone reassures the people that he will not tolerate palpable violations of the letter and spirit of his order against offensive participation in party work.—Chicago News.

DRIFT OF THE PRESS.

——We notice that Mr. Blaine's appearance in Pennsylvania politics was regarded with a certain coldness by a number of Republican journals. There are evidently Republicans who see that it is not wise to do a political party up in a bundle and tie it to the tail of a particular candidate.—N. Y. Herald.

——The Democratic party is the friend of labor. It is the party of the common people. While it has its share of rich men, it has more than its share of those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. The bulk of the Nation's toilers are in its ranks, and from it that immense and powerful organization, the Knights of Labor, has drawn its membership. It is the party which lifts the house we live in by raising the foundations, while the Republican party is satisfied to leave the foundations in the mud and to raise the roof.—N. Y. Herald.

——Whatever else may be said of President Cleveland, he means to be President, and he has the courage of his convictions. Whether others sympathize with the spirit of his famous order, forbidding Federal office-holders from taking part in political campaigns or not, for himself he does not propose that it shall fall into a state of innocuous desuetude. Two United States District Attorneys, who thought themselves bigger men than "old man Cleveland," have achieved National fame contemporaneously with finding their official heads in the basket of the executioner. The President means what he says, and whether one approves or not, the great bulk of the country will admire him the more for the honesty with which he follows his words with actions.—Raleigh (N. C.) News.

One of Herrmann's Tricks.

One story he relates is worth repeating. He was summering at a foreign watering place, and was constantly besieged by the Countess Somebody to perform some of his tricks. He pleaded that he was on his vacation, and that he desired to rest. Finally she cornered him in a pavilion overlooking the sea, and in the presence of a large company entreated him to show them what he could do. "You have a beautiful necklace," he said at last; "please let me have it." The Countess complied, and Herrmann immediately threw the costly chain of gems into the ocean. "How dare you do that?" demanded the Count, angrily. Without replying, Herrmann reached forward and brought forth a large bouquet from the inside of the gentleman's coat. Handing it to the Countess, he bade her open it. "She did so," says Herrmann, laughingly telling the story, "and right in the bouquet she found her necklace. Now that was real nice, wasn't it?"—Washington Post.

Taxing Bachelors.

The question of taxing bachelors has again risen in France. A petition to that effect has been sent to the Chamber of Deputies. It says that in Paris alone there are nearly half a million, whereas the number of married men is not more than 379,000. We are reminded that the tax, singular as it may seem, has already existed in several countries. The French Convention adopted it. So did the old republics. In Sparta the women were allowed to drag bachelors into the Temple of Hercules and given them a sound thrashing. Plato condemned them to a fine. Rome made them pay a round sum. Camillus went further, and forced them to marry the widows of citizens killed in defending the country. The petitioners say the tax ought to be doubly welcome—first, because it will increase the declining population by inducing bachelors to marry, and secondly, because it will help to make up the growing deficit in the budget.—Pall Mall Gazette.

DIPHTHERIA—SCARLET FEVER.

Prevention and Restriction of These Deadly Diseases—Important Circular Issued by the Ohio State Board of Health.

Diphtheria is often a most malignant and fatal disease and each year causes many deaths in our State. For this reason, and that it is to a large extent a preventable disease, the State Board of Health have issued this document hoping to disseminate among the people such facts known about the disease as may restrict its spread and prevent its occurrence.

Diphtheria is a contagious and infectious disease and the strict observance of the following rules and precautions are urged upon all who may come in contact with it.

1. When a child has sore throat with fever and especially when diphtheria is present in the neighborhood, it should be kept apart from others until a competent physician has determined it is not diphtheria.

2. When a person is known to be sick with diphtheria, he should immediately be separated from all others, excepting his attendants, and removed to a room which should be specially prepared for his occupancy.

3. This room should be prepared by removing from it all superfluous furniture, carpets, extra clothing, books, window curtains and all other similar articles not needed in the room. It should be as remote as possible from the family rooms—preferably in the upper story—and care should be taken to secure an abundance of fresh air, without exposing the patient to direct drafts.

4. A card with "Diphtheria" on it in large plain letters should be placed in a conspicuous position on the house in which there is a person sick with the disease. No child should be allowed to enter the house.

5. No one should be admitted to the sick room except the necessary nurses and attendants.

6. No food or drink which has been in the sick room should be partaken of by the well. The dishes carried in should be washed separately.

7. Under no circumstances should the bed clothes or the patient's body linen be mixed with the other soiled clothing, or be admitted to the general wash, without being first thoroughly disinfected.

8. All persons recovering from diphtheria are dangerous, and should not be permitted to attend school, church, or any public assembly until, in the judgment of a careful physician, they are no longer a source of contagion.

9. No public funeral should be held of any person dying of diphtheria. In no case should any child be permitted to attend.

DISINFECTION.

When a case of diphtheria occurs, let the following disinfectant solutions be prepared at once:

Solution No. 1.—Dissolve chloride of lime, of the best quality, in soft water, in the proportion of four ounces to the gallon.

Solution No. 2.—Dissolve sulphate of iron (known also as copperas) in hot water, in the proportion of two pounds to the gallon. (It has been demonstrated that copperas is not properly a disinfectant. It is an excellent antiseptic, arresting putrefactive decomposition, but does not destroy the vitality of disease germs or the infecting power of material containing them. Hence it must not be substituted for Solutions No. 1 or No. 3.)

Rules for Disinfection.—1. The discharges from the throat, mouth and nose are exceedingly poisonous and should be received on soft cloths, which must be immediately burned or immersed in Solution No. 1.

2. The discharges from the kidneys and bowels, and vomited matters, are also dangerous, and should be received in a vessel containing Solution No. 1. Retain in the vessel fifteen minutes, when the contents may safely be thrown into the water closet or privy vault.

3. The soiled clothing, bed linen, towels, etc., should at once, before being carried from the sick room, be placed in boiling water and boiled for thirty minutes. If, for any reason, this can not be done, they may be soaked in the following solution:

Solution No. 3.—Dissolve corrosive sublimate in hot water, in the proportion of two ounces to the gallon. Label poison, and keep in a wooden or earthen vessel.

Take two fluid ounces, or a half-teacupful of this solution to one gallon of water, and let the articles to be disinfected be thoroughly soaked in this, remaining immersed at least two hours; they may then be wrung out and sent to the wash.

4. The body of a person who has died of diphtheria should be washed with Solution No. 1 and wrapped in a sheet wet with the same. The body should be buried at once, and, in no case should be exposed to view.

5. After death or recovery of the sick, the room, furniture, and other contents not to be destroyed, must be thoroughly disinfected.

a. It is best to burn all articles which have been in contact with the person. Those too valuable to destroy may be treated as follows:

b. All articles which can be washed may be treated according to Rule 3, under Disinfection.

c. Clothing and bedding which can not be washed may be disinfected by exposure to dry heat for three or four hours. A temperature of 230° Fah. must be maintained during this time, and the articles freely exposed, i. e., not folded or arranged in piles or bundles.

7. The room and all articles in it, which can not be treated by either of the above methods, must be thoroughly fumigated.

a. The contents of the room should be so arranged as to expose the greatest amount of surface to the action of the disinfectant. Heavy woolen clothing, silks, furs, stuffed bed covers and similar articles, should be hung up in the room and pockets turned inside out. Pillows, mattresses, upholstered furniture, etc., must be cut open and the contents spread out for fumigation. Carpets are best fumigated on the floor. After fumigation, these articles must all be hung in the open air and thoroughly beaten and shaken.

8. To disinfect a room by fumigation, proceed as follows:

a. Close the apartment as completely as possible, stopping all openings through which the gas might escape. Thoroughly dampen the floor, walls, and furniture.

b. For a room about ten feet square, take three pounds of sulphur, broken into small fragments. For larger rooms use a proportionately larger amount of sulphur. Put it into an iron pan, and to avoid danger from fire, support the pan on bricks, placed in a tub containing a few inches of water. Moisten the sulphur with alcohol and set on fire, being careful not to breathe the fumes of the burning sulphur. When certain the sulphur is burning well, leave the room, close the door, and allow the room to be tightly closed for several hours.

c. Open all the windows and air the room thoroughly for several hours. If the wall and ceilings are papered, remove the paper and burn it. The floor, walls, ceiling, wooden furniture, etc., should be thoroughly washed with a solution made by adding two pints of Solution No. 3 to four gallons of water. Allow this to remain on for twenty-four hours, and then scrub thoroughly with soap and hot water.

9. The house and premises generally should be put in the cleanest condition possible, and every means taken to secure pure air and pure drinking water.

10. Cellars, privies, cess-pools, water-closets, drains, sewers, etc., should be frequently and liberally treated with Solution No. 2.

The foregoing methods of disinfection are applicable in all contagious diseases.

If Solution No. 1 is objectionable on account of the odor of the chloride of lime, an equally efficient disinfectant, to be used in the same way, may be made by adding one pint of Solution No. 3 to one gallon of water. It is necessary to leave it a longer time—at least an hour—in contact with the material to be disinfected.

Label all solutions of corrosive sublimate poison.

PREVENTIVE MEASURES.

1. Avoid the contagium of the disease. Especially should children be guarded against contact with any thing which has been near one sick with the disease.

2. Be careful of books, toys, cats and dogs which may have been handled by a diphtheric patient.

3. If any one visits such a case, he should bathe, disinfect and change his clothing before going where there are children.

4. Beware of anyone with a sore throat; do not kiss such a person, or drink from the same cup, or put any thing into your mouth he may have handled.

5. When diphtheria is present in your neighborhood, beware of taking children to crowded assemblies in unventilated rooms.

6. See that your house, cellar and yard are kept perfectly clean, and your living and sleeping rooms are well ventilated.

Cleanliness, pure air and pure water are the three great foes of this disease.

To the public these rules may seem numerous and, perhaps, unimportant, but the State Board of Health would not be doing its whole duty if it failed to point out the best possible means known of restricting and preventing this dread disease.

SCARLET FEVER.

Scarlet fever, also called scarlatina, scarlet rash, canker rash, etc., is a dangerous, contagious disease, of far more importance in our State, owing to its frequency, than either small-pox or cholera.

The contagium or poison of scarlet fever surpasses that of any other eruptive fever, except small-pox, in its tenacious attachment to objects and in portability to distant localities.

The poison may retain its infecting properties for months unless destroyed by proper disinfection.

It usually attacks children under ten years of age, hence the great importance of guarding children from being exposed to the disease. The latest evidence indicates that scarlet fever never originates from any filthy or atmospheric influence, but is always due to a specific principle or contagium. In other words, scarlet fever can only occur by infection from a pre-existing case of the same disease. Countries have been free from it for centuries and imported by commerce. In view of this fact the great importance of isolation, quarantine and disinfection in preventing the spread of the disease, is beyond question. From want of proper precautions in this respect, it not unfrequently happens that scarlet fever will attack successively a large family of children. It is believed that by the strict observance of the following rules and regulations this disease may be greatly restricted in our State.

1. When a child has sore throat and fever, and especially when scarlet fever is present in the neighborhood, it should immediately be separated from others until a physician has seen it and determined whether it has scarlet fever.

2. When a person is known to be sick with this disease, no matter how light the attack may appear to be, he should immediately be separated from all others excepting his attendants, and removed to a room specially prepared for his occupancy.

3. This room should be prepared by removing from it all superfluous furniture, carpets, extra clothing, books, etc., in short, every thing not absolutely needed for the comfort of the sick, or the convenience of the attendants. All objects connected with the room should have everything removed from them.

4. The room should be large, preferably in the upper story, and as far removed from the family rooms as possible.

5. The best means for disinfecting a sick room is to secure an abundance of fresh air. The patient, however, must not be exposed to direct drafts, and this can be avoided by fitting beneath the lower window sash a strip of board a few inches in width.

6. Other children of the family, not affected, may be sent to some place where there are no children, or others liable to take the disease, but their clothing should have had no contact with the patient, or should be disinfected, and they should remain apart from the public for a period of two weeks.

7. Friends should not be allowed to visit the patient, and no one should be admitted to the sick room except the nurse and necessary attendants. No child must be allowed to enter the house.

8. A card with "Scarlet Fever" on it should be placed in a conspicuous position on the house or premises in which there is a person sick with the disease.

9. The attendants should wear only such clothing as can be washed, and should keep themselves and their patient perfectly clean. Especially should they guard against allowing the discharges from the patient to remain on their hands, which should be frequently washed in a disinfectant solution.

10. Food or drink which has been in the sick-room should not be thrown in the swill-barrel; it should be cared for in the same manner as the discharges of the patient.

11. All cups, glasses, spoons, etc., used in the sick-room should be washed separate from the other dishes, and should remain some time in boiling water.

12. Towels, bed-clothes, the patient's body linen, etc., should not be mixed with the other soiled clothing, or be admitted to the general wash without being first thoroughly disinfected.

13. All persons recovering from scarlet fever are dangerous, and should not be permitted to attend school, church, or other public assembly, nor allowed to play with other children. They are sources of contagion so long as any peeling or scaling of the skin continues, and must be kept secluded until this process is fully completed.

14. A public funeral must not be held of any one dying from this disease, and in no case should any child be permitted to attend. Newspaper notices of such deaths should distinctly state that the deceased died of scarlet fever.

DISINFECTION.

When a case of scarlet fever occurs, let the following disinfectant solutions be prepared at once:

Solution No. 1.—Dissolve chloride of lime, of the best quality, in soft water, in the proportion of four ounces to the gallon. (It has been demonstrated that copperas is not properly a disinfectant. It is an excellent antiseptic, arresting putrefactive decomposition, but does not destroy the vitality of disease germs or the infecting power of material containing them. Hence it must not be substituted for Solutions No. 1 or No. 2.)

Solution No. 2.—Dissolve corrosive sublimate in hot water, in the proportion of two ounces to the gallon, and add one drachm of permanganate of potash to each gallon to give color to the solution.

1. The discharges from the throat, mouth and nose are extremely dangerous, and should be received on soft cloths (handkerchiefs should not be used) which must be immediately burned or immersed in Solution No. 1.

2. Vomited matters, discharges from the bowels, kidneys, eyes, ears and skin, are also dangerous, and should be treated as above, or be directly received in a vessel containing a pint or more of Solution No. 1. Retain in the vessel thirty minutes, when the contents may be thrown in the water-closet or privy-vault.

3. The particles of skin thrown off from the patient's body are supposed to be frequent carriers of the contagium, and, unless countermanded by the physician, the body should be frequently anointed with vaseline, oil, etc., which prevents their dissemination.

4. The soiled clothing, bed linen, towels, etc., should at once be placed in boiling water and boiled thirty minutes. If this can not be done in the sick room, they should be placed immediately in a solution prepared by adding a half teacupful of Solution No. 2 to one gallon of water; or in the same proportion for larger quantities. Allow them to remain in the solution at least two hours; they may then be wrung out and sent to the laundry.

5. The body of a person who has died of scarlet fever should be washed with Solution No. 1 and wrapped in a sheet wet with the same. The body should be buried at once, and in no case should be exposed to view.

7. After death or recovery of the sick, the room, furniture, and other contents not to be destroyed, must be thoroughly disinfected.

a. It is best to burn all articles which have been in contact with the person. Those too valuable to destroy, may be treated as follows:

b. All articles which can be washed may be treated according to Rule 4, under Disinfection.

7. The room and all articles in it, which can not be treated by either of the above methods, must be thoroughly fumigated.

a. The contents of the room should be so arranged as to expose the greatest amount of surface to the action of the disinfectant. Heavy woolen clothing, silks, furs, stuffed bed covers and similar articles, should be hung up in the room and pockets turned inside out. Pillows, mattresses, upholstered furniture, etc., must be cut open and the contents spread out for fumigation. Carpets are best fumigated on the floor. After fumigation, these articles must all be hung in the open air and thoroughly beaten and shaken.

PREVENTIVE MEASURES.

1. Avoid the contagium of the disease. Especially should children be prevented from going near a case of scarlet fever, or from coming in contact with any thing which has been near one sick with this disease.

2. Be careful of books, toys, cats and dogs which may have been handled by a scarlet fever patient. The disease has been spread by circulating libraries; picture books having been taken therefrom to amuse the patient, and returned without being disinfected.

3. One recovering from this disease should not be permitted to mingle with the public, until he and his clothing have been thoroughly cleaned and disinfected.

4. No child coming from a house containing a case of scarlet fever, should be allowed to attend school or other public assembly, and should be prevented from playing with other children.

5. Any one coming from such a house should bathe, disinfect and change his clothing before going where there are children.

6. Beware of any one with a sore throat; do not allow your children to be kissed by such a person, or to drink from the same cup.

7. When scarlet fever is present in your community do not take children to crowded assemblies in unventilated rooms.

8. See that your house and premises are perfectly clean. Look to your cellars, sewers, cess-pools, sinks and water-closets, and allow no decaying animal or vegetable matter to poison the atmosphere of your dwelling.

To those who fail to appreciate the serious nature of this disease, these rules may seem numerous, and, perhaps, unimportant. Prevention is better than cure, and the State Board of Health has presented the best possible means known of restricting and preventing the spread of scarlet fever.

—The fig tree has always been associated with the vine as an emblem of peace and plenty. A young lady asks why the fruit is then counted as comparatively worthless in the common expression, "I don't care a fig" for the object described. This is figo or fico, not a fruit, but a fillip or snap of the fingers. The Italian far le fiche—to snap the fingers—gives the key to the contemptuous expression so often used.—Chicago Herald.

The British Empire.

It is pointed out that the British Empire extends over a far larger territory than that which was governed by ancient Rome, the superficies of the latter being one million and a half square leagues. No English speaking people is under foreign rule, while Britain governs nearly three hundred million individuals belonging to all nations and speaking all the languages of the world, as for instance, Germans (Heligoland), Spaniards (Gibraltar), Greeks, Italians, Turks (Cyprus), Arabs (Aden), Dutch (Africa), French (Mauritius), Chinese, Indians, Persians (Asia) etc.—[illegible]

Common Sense

Should be exercised in taking a remedy for catarrh. It is caused by impurity in the blood; hence the proper method of cure is to purify the blood. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best blood purifier, and has had wonderful success in curing catarrh. Give it a trial. Be sure to get Hood's.

"I suffered severely from chronic catarrh, arising, I believe, from impure blood. It became very bad, causing much soreness of the bronchial tubes, and a troublesome cough, which gave great anxiety to my friends and myself, as two brothers died from bronchial consumption. I tried many advertised medicines for catarrh, both inhaling and internal; but it was simply money thrown away, as I received no benefit. I was at last induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I am not the same man in health or feelings. My catarrh is cured, my throat is entire well, and a dyspeptic trouble accompanied by sick headache have all disappeared." E. M. LINCOLN, 25 Chambers Street, Boston.

THE COCAINE HABIT.

The Worst Slavery Known—New Revelations of Power.

Cincinnati Times-Star.

When cocaine was discovered the medical world exclaimed "thank heaven!"

But useful as it is, it is also dangerous, especially when its use is perverted from the deadening of pain for surgical operations to the stimulation and destruction of the human body. Its first effects are soothing and captivating, but the thralldom is the most horrible slavery known to humanity.

J. L. Stephens, M. D., of Lebanon, O., was interviewed by our reporter yesterday at the Grand Hotel, and during the conversation the doctor said: "The cocaine habit is a thousand times worse than the morphine and opium habits, and you would be astonished," he said, "if you knew how frightfully the habit is increasing."

"What are its effects?"

"It is the worst constitution wrecker ever known. It ruins the liver and kidneys in half a year, and when this work is done the strongest constitution soon succumbs."

"Do you know of Dr. Underhill's case here in Cincinnati?"

"That leading physician who became a victim of the cocaine habit? Yes. His case was a very sad one, but the habit can be cured. I have rescued many a man from a worse condition."

"What [illegible] Dr. Underhill?"

"Indeed, sir, for me, Justin M. Hall, A. M., M. D., president of the State Board of Health of Iowa, and a famed practitioner, and Alexander Nail, M. D., professor of surgery in the Columbus Medical College, and president of the Academy of Medicine, a man widely known, Rev. W. P. Clancey, of Indianapolis, Ind., from personal experience in opium eating, etc., can tell you of the kind of success our form of treatment wins, and so can H. C. Wilson, formerly of Cincinnati, who is now associated with me."

"Would you mind letting our readers into the secret of your methods?"

"Well, young man, you surely have a good bit of assurance to ask a man to give his business away to the public, but I won't wholly disappoint you. I have treated over 20,000 patients. In common with many eminent physicians, I, for years made a close study of the effects of the habits on the system and the organs which they most severely attack. Dr. Hall, Dr. Nail and Mr. Wilson, whom I have mentioned, and hundreds of others, equally as expert, made many similar experiments on their own behalf. We each found that those drugs worked most destructively in the kidneys and liver; in fact, finally destroyed them. It was then apparent that no cure could be affected until those organs could be restored to health. We recently exhausted the entire range of medical science, experimenting with all known remedies for these organs, and as the result of these close investigations we all substantially agreed, though following different lines of inquiry, that the most reliable, scientific preparation, was Warner's safe cure. This was the second point in the discovery. The third was our own private form of treatment, which, of course, we do not divulge to the public. Every case that we have treated first with Warner's safe cure, then with our own private treatment, and followed up again with Warner's safe cure for a few weeks, has been successful. These habits can't be cured without using it, because the habit is nourished and sustained in the liver and kidneys. The habit can be kept up in moderation, however, if free use be also made, at the same time, of that great remedy."

"Yes, it is a world famed and justly celebrated specific! Like many other physicians, I used to deride the claims made for it, but I know now for a fact that it is the world's greatest blessing, having sovereign power over hitherto incurable diseases of the kidneys and liver, and when I have said that, young man, I have said nearly everything, for most diseases originate in, or are aggravated by, a depraved condition of the kidneys."

"People do not realize this, because, singular as it may seem, the kidneys may be in a very advanced stage of decomposition, and yet owing to the fact that there are but few nerves of sensation in them the subject will not experience much pain therein. On this account thousands of people die every year of kidney disease unknowingly. They have so called disorders of the head, of the heart and lungs and stomach, and treat them in vain, for the real cause of their misery is deranged kidneys and if they were restored to health the other disorders would soon disappear."

Dr. Stephens' experience, that can be confirmed by many thousands whom he has treated, adds only more emphasis to the experience of many hundreds of thousands all over the world, that the remedy he refers to is without any doubt the most beneficent discovery ever given to humanity.

ARTHUR DEAD.

The Ex-President Passes Quietly Away at His Home on Lexington Avenue, New York,

At Five O'Clock Thursday Morning, of Cerebral Apoplexy, Resulting From the Bursting of a Blood Vessel, Surrounded by His Family and Friends, in the Fifty-seventh Year of His Age—The Funeral to Take Place Monday.

PASSED AWAY QUIETLY.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Ex-President Arthur died from a stroke of cerebral apoplexy, at five o'clock Thursday morning, at his residence on Lexington avenue this city. It came in his sleep on Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning, and he did not rally. His death was painless. He was unconscious to the end.

His law partner, Sherman W. Knevals, Surrogate Rollins, his son and daughter, and his sisters were present.

At the residence of the late ex-President Arthur a United Press reporter met Mr. Sherman, N. Knevals, the law partner of the dead man, who said: "On Tuesday last the ex-President felt well, and was very bright. He ate heartily of some clams and signed his name to several communications. He also gave orders regarding transactions of interest to him." Dr. George Peters, the family physician, called at 9 p. m. and was highly pleased at the condition of his patient. The attendant left the ex-President at half-past twelve. He was then sleeping.

When the attendant entered his room Wednesday morning the ex-President was lying on his right side, breathing heavily. He spoke to him, but received no answer. He placed his hand gently on his shoulder, but could not arouse him. The attendant became alarmed and summoned young Mr. Arthur, who hurried a messenger to the residence of Dr. Peters. He responded quickly to the call. After examining Mr. Arthur, Dr. Peters said the President's case was hopeless, as the cause of his condition was a stroke of apoplexy, caused by the bursting of a blood vessel, also causing the whole right side of the body to become paralyzed. Word was sent immediately to his relatives and friends, and those who could arrived before his death.

Mr. Arthur remained in an unconscious condition all day. His breathing became more and more labored, but dissolution was very slow. His immediate relatives were in and out of the room where the ex-President lay all day and throughout the night.

There was no scene at the bedside, and at the time death occurred it was not expected. Although Miss Nellie knew that her father was quite ill, the news of his death came like a sudden shock to her, and she was completely overwhelmed with grief. Her aunt, Mrs. McElroy, led her to the bedside where the ex-President lay, when the young orphan's tears fell copiously, and she was led away inconsolable. Young Mr. Arthur took his father's death very hard, but bore up manfully. He had been a companion to his father, and his death moved the faithful son."

Ex-President Arthur was at the time of his death in his fifty-seventh year.

The funeral will take place from the Church of the Heavenly Rest, on Fifth avenue, near Forty-fifth street, at nine o'clock on Monday morning and the remains will be buried in the family plot in the Albany Rural Cemetery.

The news of the death of the ex-President spread rapidly and the flags on the public buildings were soon displayed at half-mast. The President and other prominent officials at Washington were at once notified.

Among the callers at the house of the deceased statesman were Seth H. French, Charles Miller, Hamilton Fish, Jr., and D. P. W. McMullen. All the courts now in session took appropriate action in regard to the death of ex-President Arthur.

Aaron J. Vanderpoel moved an adjournment of the Supreme Court chambers out of respect to the memory of the ex-President. He spoke of him in eulogistic terms as being a worthy citizen and a distinguished lawyer. He referred to his ability as a soldier and his services in the custom house and as Vice President and President of the United States. Mr. Vanderpoel then suggested that out of respect to his memory the court adjourn for the day.

Similar motions were made and granted in all the branches of the Supreme, Superior and Common Pleas courts in session when the sad intelligence was made known. Part 2 of the General Sessions court was also adjourned on a motion made by ex-Judge Bedford, who spoke briefly of the late General's administration.

Dr. Peters, of No. 12 West Twenty-ninth street, who was General Arthur's attending physician, said to a United Press reporter: "General Arthur's death was caused by cerebral apoplexy attended by paralysis of the right side. One of the weakened blood vessels in the brain gave way and the suffusion of the blood into the brain caused death. He died at five o'clock Thursday morning. He simply stopped breathing at that hour and that was the only thing that marked the going out of his life. For about twenty hours he had been unconscious, and suffered no pain. For a number of years, certainly three or four, General Arthur has suffered from Bright's disease, and has also been troubled with enlargement of the heart. The action of the heart has been feeble for more than three years. Since his return from New London he has been in rather better health than during the early part of the year. He had not been as comfortable for years as he was on Tuesday night last. He might have lived on for years had it not been for this stroke of apoplexy.

LATER—The funeral of President Arthur has been postponed until Monday, November 22, at nine o'clock a. m. at the Church of Heavenly Rest. The postponement was made in order to allow the members of the ex-President's Cabinet, who are expected to act as pall-bearers, time to be present. The remains will be buried in the Rural Cemetery on the Troy road, about four miles above Albany. President Cleveland and Cabinet will attend the burial in a body.

Mrs. McElroy and C. A. Arthur, Jr., have received, in addition to those of the President and Governor Hill, telegrams of sympathy from Senator Edmunds, Judges Gresham, Matthews and Blatchford, General Sheridan, Robert Lincoln, Hon. John Sherman, ex-Attorney General Brewster, the Governors of the various States, the French, Mexican and other Ministers and many other public men. There were many callers at the house yesterday and up to ten o'clock last evening. Rev. Dr. Parker Morgan will officiate at the funeral.

The body will be conveyed to the cemetery by the New York Central train leaving New York at 10:00 a. m. Monday. There will be no military display at the funeral ceremonies, but a military escort offered by General Schofield will probably be accepted.

The body will remain at the house until the funeral. There will be no formal lying in state. The family desire the funeral to be as quiet as is compatible with the public character of the deceased.

The President has telegraphed that he will be accompanied by Secretaries Bayard, Whitney and Lamar and Postmaster General Vilas.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The intelligence of the death of ex-President Arthur was received with expressions of regret by every one. The first news of the sad event was conveyed to the President in a dispatch from James C. Reed, the confidential secretary of the late President. The President was much shocked by the news and immediately sent the following telegram to Mrs. McElroy, the President's sister:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

Mrs. John McElroy, No. 123 Lexington avenue, New York.

Accept my heartfelt sympathy in your personal grief and the expressions of my sorrow for the death of one who was my kind and considerate friend. The people of this country will sincerely mourn the loss of a citizen who served them well in their highest trust and won their affection by an exhibition of the best traits of true American character.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The flags on the White House and public buildings were placed at half-mast immediately after the receipt of the news.

The President issued the following official announcement of the sad news:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 18, 1886.

To the People of the United States:

It is my painful duty to announce the death of Chester Allan Arthur, lately the President of the United States, which occurred, after an illness of long duration, at an early hour Thursday morning at his residence in the city of New York.

Mr. Arthur was called to the chair of Chief Magistracy of the Nation by a tragedy which cast its shadow over the entire government.

His assumption of the grave duties was marked by an evident and conscientious sense of his responsibilities and an earnest desire to meet them in a patriotic and benevolent spirit.

With dignity and ability he sustained the important duties of his station, and the reputation of his personal worth, conspicuous graciousness and patriotic fidelity will long be cherished by his fellow countrymen. In token of respect to the memory of the deceased, it is ordered that the Executive Mansion and the several departmental buildings be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days; and that on the day of the funeral all public business in the departments be suspended.

The Secretaries of War and of the Navy will cause orders to be issued for appropriate military and naval honors to be rendered on that day.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The flags on the government buildings flying at half-mast conveyed to many the first intimation of the death of ex-President Arthur. The news spread rapidly and was received with expressions of regret by every one. Here, where Mr. Arthur was so well known, he had many warm personal friends. His political opponents concede that his administration left no taint of dishonor, was generally safe and conservative—in some respects memorable—and that it commanded the respect of the country.

President Cleveland and several members of the Cabinet will leave here Friday night to attend the funeral.

Secretary Endicott has issued orders directing appropriate observances at the different army posts on the day of the funeral, and Attorney General Garland will make official announcement of the death of the ex-President to the Supreme Court of the United States to-day. Secretary Bayard has issued notice of the death to the diplomatic and consular representatives of this government.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Governor Hill left this city yesterday afternoon for Havana, his native town. He will deliver an address there on Saturday at the unveiling of a bronze bust of Hon. Charles Cook. The Governor, before his departure, issued the following proclamation:

STATE OF NEW YORK.

Proclamation by the Governor.

By the death of a distinguished citizen the people of the State are again called to mourn. Chester Allan Arthur entered into rest at his residence in New York City early Thursday morning. He had always made his home within our State, and from his early manhood had occupied with credit places of official distinction. As a citizen of New York State he was elected Vice President of the whole people. Upon the death of President Garfield he became President by succession and with dignity to himself and with honor to the country he filled that highest office in our government. In all his life he bore without abuse the name of gentleman. Remembering the services and admiring the character of President Arthur, it is fitting that we should by such action as may be deemed appropriate, express our sorrow in his death and show respect for the high official position which he held by choice of his countrymen.

Done at the Capitol at the City of Albany on the eighteenth day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-six.

DAVID B. HILL, Governor.

WM. G. RICE, Private Secretary.

An order has also been issued by the Governor that flags on all armories in the State be placed at half-mast out of respect for the ex-President.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 19.—Flags on the State House were put at half-mast yesterday out of respect for ex-President Arthur, and the Governor sent the following message of condolence:

To Chester A. Arthur, Jr., New York:

The people of Ohio have learned with profound sorrow of the death of your illustrious father, and on their behalf I tender the sincerest sympathy in this hour of bereavement.

J. B. FORAKER.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—At the Governor's order the flags at the State House will be displayed at half-mast on account of Mr. Arthur's death, but no further action will be taken until after official notice from Washington.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

Buffalo is Visited by a Destructive Fire, the Loss of Which will be Over $200,000—Several Firemen Injured.

BUFFALO, Nov. 19.—A most disastrous fire occurred here at 2:30 o'clock Thursday morning in the large building on the corner of Hanover and Prime streets, occupied by G. N. Pierce & Co., cage manufacturers. The fire had gained great headway before the fire department got to work and spread rapidly, crossing Hanover street to the buildings occupied by N. Wolf, dealer in sheep skins, hides and tallow; A. F. Weppner, wholesale provisions; Sidney Shepard & Co.'s tinware works and Wallace Johnson's building, which was partially burned some time ago. The flames spread eastward through the block and soon reached the Buffalo printing ink works and bade fair to go through the block to Main street.

The flames were so fierce that the firemen were forced out of Hanover street and compelled to fight the fire from only one side. The wind blew a perfect gale off the lake, and had it not been for the rain which was falling and aided the efforts of the firemen, the whole block must have been destroyed.

At 4:20 the fire was partially under control and confined to the buildings mentioned. The total loss is estimated at $200,000. Pierce's factory and contents is an entire loss. The building was valued at $50,000 and the stock about the same amount. Dormer & Clark's fish market was also destroyed, loss on building and stock being about $50,000. Lantz Bro.'s soap factory also suffered, but loss not yet learned. Weppner's loss on building and stock will reach $20,000. Shepard's loss will be heavy, but not yet estimated. The walls of the Pierce factory caved in on a number of firemen, five of whom were slightly injured. The losses on the other buildings are not yet known. The printing ink works suffered only slight damage. About 2,500 persons are thrown out of employment. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Carried to His Last Resting Place Without Pomp or Display.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Preparations for the obsequies of the late ex-President Arthur began very early. There was no service at the house. The few friends present looked upon the face of the dead early in the morning and the casket was closed for the last time. At 8:30 the black casket, covered with palmetto leaves, sprays of violets and a wreath of white roses, was lifted by the undertakers and borne from the room. Next came out of the residence Chester Allan Arthur, Jr., the son of the ex-President. Leaning on his arm was his sister, Miss Nellie. They passed to their carriage, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McElroy. Then came Mrs. Caws, Mrs. Haynesworth and Miss Arthur, the sister of the ex-President; Postmaster Masten and his wife, of Cohoes, N. The mourners filled twenty-five carriages. The procession arrived at the church, corner of Forty-fifth street and Fifth avenue, at 8:50 a. m. The familiar hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," was joined in by the large congregation. The Apostles' Creed followed, and then the choir sang the sweet anthem, "I Heard a Voice From Heaven." Rev. Dr. Leonard offered prayer, and the congregation joined in singing, "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou Languid?" Rev. Dr. Parker Morgan then prayed for the blessing of God upon the family. The services were concluded with the benediction by Rev. Dr. Morgan. When the funeral service ended the troops wheeled by companies into column, followed by the sailors and marines. After the casket was placed in the hearse the cortege, to the sorrowful dirge, Chopin's "Funeral March," passed slowly between the long lines of police through Forty-fifth street to Vanderbilt avenue. At the Grand Central depot the troops drew up in line facing the depot and presented arms. It took but a few minutes to transfer the coffin from the hearse to the funeral-car "Woodlawn." The family and friends took seats in the three drawing-room coaches composing the special train, and at 10:30 a. m. the journey to Albany was commenced. The train reached Albany at 1:22 o'clock. The remains were at once taken to the Rural Cemetery, where they were followed by the Common Council in a body, the Grant Club and other delegations. GOLDEN GRAIN.

The Red River Valley Crop Bountiful Beyond Precedent.

CHICAGO, Nov. 22.—A Times special from Fargo, Dak., says: The wheat crop of the Red River Valley proves to be larger than the estimates. The Manitoba road has 4,900 cars, but many of them are tied up at Duluth, owing to the lack of facilities there to handle the grain. ANARCHIST PLANS.

Diabolical Suggestion to Blow Up the Water Tower and Burn Chicago.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—A local German paper asserts in its issue to-day that the Anarchists of this city have renewed their agitation, and that the call for meetings of the "groups" are circulated openly. "Monday evening," the article says, "in the hall on Clybourn avenue a meeting of the North Side Group of the International Working People's Association was held, at which various 'plans' were discussed. Some of the persons present thought that on a stormy night, with a few pounds of dynamite, the water tower could be blown up and fires started at some dozen different places. The Water works destroyed, the fire department could have no water, half the city would go up in a blaze, and in the confusion thus caused the re-organized groups and companies of the Lehr und Wehr Verein could easily capture the city." Police Captain Schaack says he has no fears of any thing happening at present, and his men are keeping a close watch on the "groups." He could not tell what he was going to do in this particular case, not having any authentic information yet, and if he had he did not think it best to make his intentions public in advance.

The editor of the Phalanx waxed wrothy on receiving the insulting message, and at once placed the matter in the hands of the United States District Attorney. Norton was indicted by the United States Grand Jury for sending obscene matter through the mails and for violating the postal laws. Yesterday the Reverend gentleman went up to Indianapolis and pleaded guilty in the United States Court, throwing himself on the mercy of the judge, who fined him $5 and admonished him to be more gentlemanly in the future in the matter of stopping his papers.

DEATH ON THE LAKES.

Frightful Shipwreck Near Frankfort, Mich.

Two Lumber Schooners Driven Ashore, and Ten Persons Perish—Lake Superior Vessel Wrecked, With Fatality.

DETROIT, Nov. 19.—A special from Frankfort says: During the height of the storm yesterday afternoon, at intervals through the blinding snow storm, a three-masted schooner could be seen about six miles southwest of Frankfort. Her poles were almost bare, and the deck seemed clear of cargo. An attempt was made to anchor her, and she held for a time, but soon broke loose and drifted helplessly before the gale. The wind gradually increased in violence, and the seas were growing every moment larger, when darkness settled like a pall over the face of the lake. Help was asked from the life-saving station at Manistee, but it was impossible for a tug to live in such a gale. After great trouble the life saving station, six miles north of here, was reached, and the apparatus hauled down the coast by a few volunteers, over steep hills, winding ravines, tree trunks and heavy snow drifts, and pelted by the driving snow and hail. They arrived at the scene of the disaster at Herring Creek at 4 o'clock this morning. The vessel was totally broken up and with the cargo piled up on the beach, every thing being completely destroyed. Broken masts, shrouds, lumber and debris, all were mixed and piled up together. Captain Matthews thinks she must have had her anchor down and pounded to pieces on the outer bar. One body was found. The vessel's yawl, with the name Menekaunee, was near by uninjured. It is thought the schooner had a crew of nine men, and that she broke as soon as she struck. No other bodies have been discovered. Another wreck was discovered two miles south, where the same chaotic wreckage was seen. The entire stem of the schooner Marinette, of Racine, Wis., was discovered. At a neighboring farm house was a bruised and battered sailor with lacerated hands, from which the flesh was stripped and his feet were badly swollen. From him it was learned that the crew of eight men were lost. A special from Duluth, Minn., says: The schooner Lucerne is lost. During the storm she was driven on Point Chequamegon. The vessel was loaded with iron, and went down in five fathoms of water. All hands were lost. Not less than 10 men were on board.

Fecheimer, 107 Third street. The wind carried the flames southward, and in less than ten minutes the clothing house of Battman Bros. at No. 96 Pearl street, the millinery store of Beackman & Co., No. 94 Pearl street, and the clothing house of Leon & Metzger, at No. 92 Pearl street, all situated just in the rear of Marcus & L. A LAND SLIDE Causes a Frightful Accident to a Panhandle Train.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Nov. 18.—At 7 o'clock this morning as the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis railroad limited express from Cincinnati and the West was entering the city, a huge landslide came down from the bluff between the Point bridge and the Smithfield street bridge, on the south side of the Monongahela river, crushing into the train. Three of the sleepers were almost buried out of sight. In one of the sleepers a stone weighing over a thousand pounds was lodged. Eight of the passengers were seriously injured, one of whom, a gentleman named Bennett, of New York, will probably die. The injured persons were promptly removed to the Monongahela House, the Seventh avenue and the St. James Hotels, and are now resting comfortably. The sleepers that were so badly damaged were the "Azalia," "Williamsport" and "Yarrow." The interiors of each were a complete wreck, while the roofs were caved and the sides torn out of the Cincinnati car. Pullman Conductor T. W. Degroot who was in the rear car, says the train was running at a speed of ten miles when the crash came. The scene following can not be described. The passengers who were not injured ran wildly about not knowing where to go or what to do. One woman rushed into his arms and fainted. No one was badly hurt in his car, but in the two front coaches the injured were quite numerous. One piece of rock struck the middle of the car and slid lengthwise to Section No. 1, in the end of the car, where it lodged, crushing the section to atoms. An old gentleman and his daughter had left the section a minute before, or they would have both been killed. The sleeper Williamsport was struck by a stone weighing almost a ton. Mrs. Lieutenant Glass had just got up and passed into her stateroom. Her berth and seat were smashed to pieces. The large rock, when it struck the bottom of the car, glanced toward the rear, and broke the seats as though they were but spider webs. One gentleman from Philadelphia, J. K. Lewis, sat just opposite Mrs. Glass. He heard the crash, jumped up, and half of his seat was smashed under him as though struck by a trip hammer. He escaped without injury, with the exception of some broken glass in his face and ear.

"I consider Mr. James G. Blaine the greatest fraud on earth," says Master Workman Powderly.

Two candidates who want to represent Nicholas and Robertson counties in the next legislature are engaged in an active canvass.

John Adams, of Magoffin county, aged 70 years, has been married eleven times, has 40 children and 100 grandchildren. One of his wives bore him 7 sons in less than four years.

CONGRESS meets again in a few days, but none of the new members will take their seats at this session. It is supposed that the session will be short and but little business of general importance will be transacted.

The breeders of fine horses about Lexington seem unable to grasp the idea that they are expected to pay taxes on their horses according to their value, just as other people pay on their property.—Lebanon Standard.

H. K. TAYLOR, of Russellville, Ky., candidate for Supt. of Public Instruction, will address the people of this county at Walton Dec. 28th, at 1 o'clock p. m., and at Burlington at 7 o'clock p. m., of the same day. Subject—"Kentucky's Problem."

INDIANA politics are in a tangled condition, and what will be the final out-come of the last election in that State cannot be surmised. The election of quite a number of representatives on each side are to be contested, and a lively time will be had at Indianapolis this winter.

The report of Third Assistant Postmaster General Hazen says that the number of letters sent annually has largely increased, and that two cent postage has about crowded out the unsealed circular. The postal card is likewise falling into disuse. In 1883, when two cent postage was introduced, 380,000,000 cards were used; in 1885, the number had dropped to 360,000,000.

THE Georgetown Times is very much chagrined over the dilapidated condition of some of the school-houses in Scott county. That is one thing in which Boone has made considerable advancement in the past decade, and nearly all the little eight by ten, log buildings, poorly seated and heated, have given away to a much larger and better furnished class of buildings, and the puncheon seat will be known no more forever in Boone county school-houses. A few districts have not kept pace with the onward march, but they will make a move soon, no doubt.

BY THIS time the farmers are certainly convinced that of all crops, tobacco is now the least profitable, owing to the fact that within the last few years so much time and attention has been given to the cultivation of that crop that the supply exceeds the demand. If the farmers will abandon tobacco culture entirely, and turn their attention to the improvement of their farms and raising of stock they will soon find that their condition is steadily getting better and that their progress will come through a channel that is reliable and permanent.

A VERY important question recently arose, and has been decided by the Grant County court. It is this: When the Treasurer of that county made his settlement with the Sheriff, he charged the Sheriff for county purposes, 25 cents on each one $100 worth of taxable property, as shown by the Assessor's book, but the Sheriff claimed that he should have been charged only on the total amount of taxable property after the reduction was made by the State Board of Equalization, and accordingly filed exceptions to the settlement. The exceptions were heard and overruled by the Court which ruled that the act creating the State Board of Equalization was for the purpose of equalizing the State revenue between the several counties in the State, and, therefore, had no application to taxation for county purposes. The Sheriff, unless the ruling of the County Court is reversed by a higher tribunal, will have to pay on the amount of property returned by the Assessor. In a county where the tax is as much as 25 cents on the $100 the changes made by the State Board makes a very material difference.

We think that the administration has won a great victory, for it has held control of the House of Representatives despite the obstacles which the giving out of the offices has created.

This is the only instance in which a Democratic administration has, since Van Buren's time, obtained a majority of the House in its second Congress. Polk lost the House in 1846, Pierce lost it in 1854, Buchanan lost it in 1858. The opposition has not fared much better. Taylor lost it in 1848, Fillmore lost it in 1850, Grant lost it in 1874. Hayes lost it in 1878 and Arthur lost it in 1882.

Lincoln carried the House in his second year, but the South was not represented in that Congress, and in the election in 1862 Lincoln suffered more severely than the present administration has at the late election. Grant held the House in 1870, but lost it by a decided majority in 1874.

Cleveland is the only Democratic President since Van Buren who has held a majority of the House in the Congress which was chosen during his second term.—N. Y. Star.

THE following is from the Vevay, Indiana, Democrat, and we give it for what it is worth:

Three weeks before the election came off, the Republican Central Committee, under instructions from headquarters at Indianapolis, sent out two men to each township in the county, who appointed two men in each school district in the county, whose duty it was to see every Republican voter in the district and ascertain how he was going to vote. If there was any doubt about his voting the straight ticket inducements of every kind were held out, even to a money consideration, where it was found that money would influence a voter the amount was set down. In this way every district in the county was canvassed and the results reported to the Republican executive committee in Vevay. It was then known how much money would be needed outside of the amount contributed by the several candidates and the members of the party who had been asked to give money to pay the expenses of the campaign, to carry the county. The money was sent here from Indianapolis and was distributed at the Court-house the latter part of the week before the election, and on election day it was used in every voting precinct in Switzerland county. It is not surprising that the county was carried by eighty majority, but it is surprising that their majority was not 200 or even greater. The question will naturally arise, where did the money come from? It was furnished by railroad corporations and manufacturing monopolies that have been fattening off the tax ridden people of the whole country. It was sent here to be used against Holman, Griffith and Pleasants. The great fight was made to defeat Holman and carry the Legislature.

Now that the whole scheme is exposed and how narrow was the escape from falling into the clutches of the grasping and robbing monopolies, the whole people ought to be thankful that it is no worse than it is. The people of this county will rebuke with severe punishment the outrages perpetrated against the right of a free ballot.

STATE NEWS.

Owen county has a $100,000 debt.

A Scott County farmer raised four hundred bushels of turnips on one acre of ground.

Alex Scobee, of Montgomery county, raised a kershaw which weighed 100 pounds.

Wheat is coming up fine in Mercer county and is looking splendid. A large acreage has been sown.

Jessamine county has about 120,000 acres of land, and is divided into about 600 farms of 200 acres each.

The colored Methodists of Paris, it is said, will arraign all their members for trial who voted against local option the other day.

The colored people of Owensboro have subscribed $2,500 to a fund for a State Colored Normal School, provided it be located in that town.

The corn crop in portions of Woodford county is not coming up to the expectation of the farmers, and a shortage of hogs is also reported.

A Warren county jury has awarded Miss Lucie Garrison $4,000 damages, to be recovered from Jerry W. Thomas, for tampering with her affections.

The grand jury has found about 88 indictments, four of which are for felony, and the remainder are mostly for violation of the local option law.—Owen News.

Senator Jno. D. Harris, of Madison county, will be a candidate for Governor of Kentucky provided the convention is called to nominate candidates at the usual time, in May next.

Judge de Haven has decided that the sole right to issue liquor license in Shelbyville is vested in the City Council. The City Council has refused to issue license, and the town [illegible].

Hovel Fugate, formerly Tax Receiver of Louisville, who defaulted for $[illegible] and was pardoned out of the penitentiary after an imprisonment of a few months, is living in Springfield, Mo., partially paralyzed and utterly destitute.

The Railroad Commission has finished assessing the railroads of the State. They find that there are 2,974 miles, about [illegible] of which are not yet taxable, and that their value is $43,800,751, an increase of nearly [illegible] million over last year.

The factional war in Perry county between French and Eversole is said to have broken out afresh. Both parties are under arms. Almost every citizen has now taken sides. The indications are that there will be trouble before long.

We learn that hydrophobia is prevailing to an alarming extent in Johnson county and that nearly all the dogs have been killed. A great many cattle and hogs have died from the effects of being bitten by rabid dogs.—Licking Valley Scorcher.

A son of Gen. Isaac Shelby, the first Chief Magistrate of Kentucky, died in Danville, Thursday. He was also named Isaac, and was in his ninety-second year. Another younger Isaac still lives; so it appears the name is being faithfully handed down to posterity.

A STRONG pressure is being brought to bear on Judge William Lindsay, of Frankfort, to make the race for representative of Franklin county. With about 100 such men as Judge Lindsay in the legislature, the State would have grounds to expect something of such a body of legislators.

Not many of our citizens are aware that natural gas has been struck in Johnson county. A party of capitalists who have been boring for oil, at the depth of 1,700 feet, struck a small vein of oil and also a vein of gas to which the citizens of Flat Gap connected a two-inch pipe, and now the town is furnished with a fine light.—Licking Valley Scorcher.

A fellow named Moore has been sent to the chain-gang in Chatham, N. C., for having traded wives with another man. Moore told the court that he did not know his act was a crime; that a man came to his house with a woman who was better-looking than his wife, and bantering him for a trade, he "swapped," paying $1.50 extra in consideration of the new woman's superior personal attraction.

The turkey trade in this town has given employment to a great many hands. There are some six or eight who buy, two or three kill, from twenty to thirty are engaged in picking, and two in boxing and preparing for shipping. From 250 to 400 are slaughtered every day. By establishing this branch of business here, it has given employment to quite a number who have been willing and anxious to work, and they have been able to earn good wages.—Corinth Enterprise.

Two "cow boys" have lately landed in Fleming county from somewhere out West, and according to reports are having lots of "fun." A dispatch says that having armed themselves with a double-barrel shot-gun and a pair of pistols, they are bidding defiance to society and levying contributions on whom they choose, without any opposition. One of the twain, Alex. Pendulum, was formerly of that county, and enjoys the reputation of being a moonshine outlaw.—Maysville Bulletin.

The heaviest purchasers of cattle operating in the blue-grass region are Lehman & Bros. of Baltimore. Their purchasing agent here is Mr. Geo. C. Kratz. Kratz buys a hundred head of cattle with as little ceremony as most men would buy a cigar, all because he knows a steer when he sees one. Yesterday he bought the following: From David James, thirty-four head, average 1,550 pounds, at 4 cents; from H. Nutter, 25 head, average 1,650 pounds at 4½ cents; from H. Worley, 33 head, average 1,650 pounds, at 4 and 4½ cents.—Lexington Press.

A special to the Enquirer, from Bowling Green, says that Jno. S. Rhea is reported to have said that he has learned enough to convince him beyond doubt that W. G. Hunter will not be the Congressman from this district to the Fiftieth Congress. It is also said that Mr. Rhea added that, while he would not, under any circumstances be induced to accept the place when Hunter was "bounced," he would see to it that Hunter's ineligibility was made plain to the world, and an opportunity, at least, given the Democrats to elect a man.

The "black leg" disease is prevailing with alarming fatality among cattle in several localities in this county. In Kentontown precinct John McGuire has lost four head; Charles B. French, two head; and Wm. Sparks several head. In [illegible] precinct W. H. Tilton has lost two head, Smith [illegible] [illegible]. If the scourge continues it will seriously cripple the cattle interests of the county. It is hoped, however, that with the advent of cold weather the disease will abate and eventually disappear.—[illegible].

About five years ago a child apparently white was found on the Richmond pike. The county Judge placed it in charge of Mrs. Margaret Powell, who has reared it until the present time, receiving from the county $8 per month. Yesterday Judge Sharp found out that the mother of the child was a colored woman named Lucy Walker, who works at Spearsville. Judge Sharp sent her word that if she did not come to get her child and take care of it, he would have her arrested. She came yesterday and got the child, taking it home with her. It proves to be an Albino, and has most peculiar features resembling those of a sheep.—Lexington Press.

"Chop off the heads of all those who favored and voted for the new revenue law" is the cry of the enraged tax-payer. We are glad that the record of Senator Harris and Hon. W. T. Tevis is on the right side in this matter. It wins the approbation of all men of all parties. Gen. Cassius M. Clay, who is a Republican candidate for Governor, in the course of his speech last Monday, took occasion to approve and compliment the Representatives of Madison county for their position in opposition to the new revenue tax bill which is so odious to the tax-payers of the country. Major Harris, though sick in bed at the time the vote was taken, was known to the bill, while Mr. Tevis was active in his opposition to it. All honor to Madison's Representatives.—Richmond Herald.

A peculiar and strange water fowl was killed in the river, near Cumberland Falls. When first seen it was standing upon a ledge of rocks, apparently looking for fish, and made no attempt to escape upon the approach of the gentleman (Mr. Jno. Perry) who shot it. After being killed the bird was measured, and found to be four feet, eight inches from tip to tip of wings and three feet from tip of tail to tip of bill. The body was that of a duck, as black as a raven, and its feet webfooted. Its greatest curiosity, however, was the neck and bill. The former was a foot long and the lower side grey, while the latter was slim with a crooked point. The throat bore an appearance of a receptacle for its food instead of a craw, as other fowls have. In this was found a catfish (minus the head) 11 inches long and two rocks as large as hen eggs. The bird's weight was five and three-quarter pounds only, and it undoubtedly was not a native of this climate.

There are some very curious mixtures of names in our counties and county seats which greatly puzzle and confuse people who are not familiar with the history and location of each. For instance, Anderson county has Lawrenceburg and Lawrence county, Louisa; Breathitt county has Jackson and Jackson county, McKee; Breckenridge county, Hardinsburg and Hardin county, Elizabethtown; Butler county, Morgantown, Union county, Morganfield, and Morgan county, West Liberty; Carlisle county, Bardwell and Nicholas county, Carlisle; Carter county, Grayson and Grayson county, Leitchfield; Christian county, Hopkinsville and Hopkins county, Madisonville; Crittenden county, Marion and Marion county, Lebanon; Franklin county, Frankfort and Simpson county, Franklin; Fulton county, Hickman and Hickman county, Clinton; Logan county, Russellville and Russell county, Jamestown; Metcalfe county, Edmonton and Edmonson county, Brownsville; Muhlenburg county, Greenville and Green county, Greensburg; Nicholas county, Carlisle and Jessamine county, Nicholasville; Ohio county, Hartford and Hart county, Munfordsville; Owsley county, Booneville and Boone county, Burlington, and Spencer county, Taylorsville and Taylor county, Campbellsville.

WILLIS [illegible]

Yesterday was a [illegible] of a damp day.

Perry Conklin and wife were in Burlington Monday.

The matrimonial market is very dull for this season of the year.

Joseph Elliston, a Mt. Sterling Attorney, was in town yesterday.

Water mill meal has struck the market again since the recent rains.

It would not be impolite to call last Wednesday night a rough night.

There has been enough rain to "lay the dust" in the bottom of the river.

The weather so far this week has not been favorable to pork recently killed.

Everybody should attend the Thanksgiving exercises in Burlington to-morrow.

We are glad to hear that Woody Hoffman's eyesight is gradually improving.

The Morgan Academy school is now practicing for a holiday musical entertainment.

The jail has now the appearance of a deserted castle, be it said to the credit of the county.

Chas. Hughes, who has been in Lexington, Kansas, returned home last Thursday evening.

When in town call in and see the stock of nice horse-blankets and lap-robes at A. M. Acra's.

This part of the county has enjoyed a very good quality of winter weather, considering the early date.

It is said by those who have been gathering it that corn is not as solid and heavy as it should be.

Several of the Methodist brethren and sisters of this place attended service at Petersburg Sunday.

There have been about 100 additions to the various churches in this county since the first of October, last.

Some of the small grain was caught beneath the frozen ground. It should have come up before winter came.

Persons desiring a good horse-blanket or lap-robe can do no better than by calling on A. M. Acra, Burlington, Ky.

On the first Sunday in next month Rev's R. E. Kirtley and Fullilove will begin a protracted meeting at Sand Run church.

The river has resumed business again, and a large quantity of coal has gone down in the past week, likewise the price thereof.

Jno. L. Sandford, of Covington, was in town last Wednesday, and qualified as assignee of J. W. Kennedy, of Normansville.

Our enterprising townsman, A. M. Acra is arranging to embark in the grocery business in connection with his harness and saddlery.

Since the protracted meeting commenced in Burlington, those cardinal red garments of ours which disappeared last spring have been returned.

A big fox hunt has been planned for to-morrow, provided the weather is favorable. J. J Berkshire, commander, J. C. Revill, aidecamp.

To-morrow is the day set apart by the National and State governments for the devouring of turkey, which on that occasion will be the national bird.

The post-office at Parkersburg, this county, is called Hathaway, and David W. Ryle is the postmaster. The office will be quite a convenience to that part of the county.

A squad of Burlington nimrods, among the number the junior member of the RECORDER firm, scoured the country that lies nigh unto the town, last Friday afternoon. Luck—six rabbits.

S. A Palmer has had a force of mechanics employed for several days putting the old Sandford building in order and expects to open next Monday for the accommodation of the public in the very best style.

We understand that the Methodists now contemplate buying the old Methodist church building and giving it a thorough repairing, which, no doubt will be much the cheaper way in which they can provide themselves with a church.

Last Friday J. M. Conner brought from the city a fine lot of feeding steers, which, a day or two before, had been driven to market. Jim bought them on the market at less figures than he could have bought them before they left the county.

Mr. O. F. Bange and wife moved their household goods to Newport last Saturday, where Mr. B. will, in a few days open a drug store of his own. Mr and Mrs. Bange made many friends during their residence in Burlington, all of whom wish them well in the future.

[illegible] one of the livest boys of Petersburg was in Burlington day before yesterday. Charley's vacation has agreed with him, and how so fine a looking fellow as he is can avoid the [illegible], is a mystery to the women.

To-morrow (Thursday) the Methodist Church will be organized in Burlington. The Methodist brethren anticipate a very interesting meeting. A dinner will be spread in the Court house, and everybody is invited to attend a regular old fashioned Methodist meeting.

Last Thursday John Swarts aged 21 son of Nicholas Swarts who lives near the mouth of Woolper, was tried and adjudged a lunatic. W. W. Grant, of Bellevue, and W. J. Cowan, of Burlington, were appointed a committee and started with him for Anchorage Asylum immediately after the trial.

The colored church at this place has been having quite an enthusiastic meeting. During services the other evening one of the brethren was overcome with enthusiasm and falling to the floor, kicked equal to a stern-wheel steamboat, while one of the sisters succumbed to the pressure and fainted away all of which proceedings did not in the least interrupt the sermon.

A leak in the roof of the Court-house put the Court room in a better condition last week to be used as a duck pond than for a court-room, and Judge Baker had to hold his court elsewhere. Should there come a heavy rain and then a sudden freeze, the room could be used as a skating rink. The truth of the matter is the Boone County Court-house is about "onskerspeld."

Last Sunday morning Miss Susan M. Mallory, daughter of Henry Mallory, who resides about a mile from town on the Petersburg pike, was married to Mr. Geo. Platt, of Indiana. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's father, in the presence of the family and a few friends, by Rev. H. A. Foster, after which they left for Indiana, their future home.

McGlasson, Walter Goodridge, Leonard Anderson, Alice E. Quigley, Ettie Riggs, Artie M. Hafer, Mrs. Southers, Miss Nora Garrett, Ottie Rouse, W. W. Tanner, Ettie Warner and Martha Warner.

Since our last report Mrs. A. C. Porter and Miss Nettie Gardner have united with the Methodist church. Seven of the converts were baptized in Mr. Winston's pond last Saturday. The meeting will close to-morrow night. The church will be organized at 10 o'clock a. m. Regular services will be held in the Presbyterian church, after which a big dinner will be served in the Court-house. Elder Southgate, who has charge of the Covington district, has been invited to be present. The meeting commenced four weeks ago to-night, and there have been 16 additions.

There seems to be a strong element in the State that favors a primary election as the proper mode of selecting Democratic candidates for State offices. The corrupt manipulations of large political conventions in the recent past have created the demand for a change, and in a primary election it is claimed that the nominations cannot be made the object of trade, as has been done in late years. In the primary every voter stands on an equal footing and one man's vote counts as much as another, and no candidate should object to having his fate decided by the popular will.

The Commonwealth is much elated over the small vote received by Mr. Carlisle, and thinks he is very unpopular at home. Boone County Recorder.

If our respected contemporary can find "elation" in a bare statement of facts he is endowed with a sharper perception than we have given him credit for. As to the unpopularity of Mr. Carlisle at home the vote of the people settles that beyond controversy. It is not what the Commonwealth thinks, but what the people have said.—Commonwealth.

The Commonwealth has not been sufficiently skillful with its pen to conceal its "elation." Besides it has been afforded several opportunities to deny the charge directly, but as yet it has failed to do so.

MISSOURI LETTER.

BUTLER, MO., Nov. 12, 1886.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

An item or two from Southwest Missouri may be of some interest and serve as answers to several inquiries, and with your permission I will say through the columns of the RECORDER, to inquiring friends that I have been here three years, and we are still satisfied and well pleased with our home and country. We are, beyond a doubt in a rich agricultural country, the soil of which seems inexhaustible in fertilizing properties.

There are lands here that have been cultivated in corn for twenty years in succession with but little change in productiveness.

Clover grows here to perfection. I have seen the common red clover from waist to breast high, and it will hold its own and rather gain the ascendency over timothy when they are sown together. It never freezes out or gets winter killed, unless pastured close late in the fall.

We have had the best of health since our sojourn here, and had we sought some famous Eldorado of perpetual youth we would not have enjoyed better health than we have here.

To all inquirers we say come out and we will make your stay as pleasant as possible, and will show you a splendid country, one that agriculturally is second to none.

I see from the RECORDER that you are having a little dry spell, and that water is quite an object. Why we have not had a rain here sufficient to help the water supply any, or to be of but little benefit to the crops, since the 26th of last June. Yet we have reasonably fair crops. Early planted corn is making from 25 to 45 bushels per acre—late corn not so much. Oats, meadows and early potatoes good.

It was thought that this fall we would have a water famine, but those having the nerve to dig 10 or 15 feet find almost anywhere an ample supply of water.

This year has demonstrated that with deep plowing and proper tillage, we can raise fair crops with less rain than any country I have ever seen.

This is destined to be a great mining country. Six years ago by actual geological survey there were 190,000 acres of coal lands in this (Bates) county, but from later developments the estimate was too small. Hundreds of car loads of coal are shipped daily from the Rich Hill coal fields, and the Rich Hill coal fields, and the coal mines at Emporia, since the Emporia railroad was built, are being opened up and are fast rivaling those at Rich Hill. In fact almost every township in the county has rich deposits of coal, even our township near to us has a four foot vein at a depth of 60 feet. I believe that Bates county is destined to be one vast mining camp and that in the near future.

Mr. Editor, it would sound quite metropolitan when reading of the Burlington bank, were it not we have banks here in nearly every town. I believe there are seven banks in Bates county, and they are seemingly on a solid basis. I am told that there has never been a defaulting banker or cashier since the first bank was started.

Butler has between 5000 and 6000 inhabitants, over 70 business houses, 3 steam flour mills, 1 saw mill, 2 tile factories, woolen factory, planing mill, 2 grain elevators and 4 newspapers, besides Rich Hill has two papers, Adrain 2, Hume 1, Rockville 1, Walnut 1, and a [illegible] or two more making at least a dozen in the county, and they all seem to flourish.

THE COMBINATION
FENCE.
A fence that is wanted and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.
Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.
It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.
Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause.
VERMIFUGE
It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.
Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.
NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.
Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.
CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

"THAT THINGS ARE NO WORSE."

From the time of [illegible]
When we [illegible] of the [illegible] thing

To [illegible]
'Tis a phrase this is [illegible]
It can comfort and [illegible]
It [illegible]

'Twas King [illegible]
To the king who had [illegible]
What he meant [illegible]
In such [illegible]
"What's the cause for your [illegible] Thanksgiving?"
Tell me [illegible] the king in his [illegible]

That things are no worse, O my lord."

There's something [illegible]

But I think on his [illegible]
And confessed it a [illegible]

There is never so [illegible]

A ROMANTIC EPISODE.

One Flirtation, One Thanksgiving, One Wedding.

BY C. S. M.

SKY PARLOR, Chicago, Oct. 6.—To the Editor in Chief Criterion, City.—Dear Sir: It pains me exceedingly to be obliged to incur your displeasure in regard to the next chapters of "Coming Events." But really the days have grown so short, with work ever on the increase—indeed, sometimes, I think I shall drop either the office or my literary aspirations altogether. The former, notwithstanding your kind assurances, I am not prepared to do; the latter, I can not; so there the days go by frittered at both ends, wasted in the middle. And then—and then—dear Mr. Editor, lend me your most sympathetic ear, if you have got such a thing—I have a little romantic episode of my own!

Hoping not to strain your kind temper too far, I remain, Yours Resp.,
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I send you the promised sheets, and hope to be "on hand" with the next.

Aha! So you really have a "sentimental ear" and want to know about my "romantic ep." Well, I do not mind telling you, we are such great friends—though we have never met. Besides, I know you are such a regular old mole you never will disclose. Besides, I have not a soul to tell, and I am dying for sympathy. You see Dick Ray and I had a regular fuss, night before last, as to our favorite style of beauty; the subject being started by a question as to preference, in my new "Mental Autograph Album." So pronounced was my enthusiasm for that rare combination, "light hair and dark eyes," that Dick, whose unrelieved ravenness has never been able to score a hit closer to the center of my heart than "friendship," was somewhat startled, and I could see not a little nettled. One word led to another, each one making me but the more loyal to what, true as fate, dear mole, has never been more than an ideal in my mind. So strong was the impression left by the controversy that sleep was not able to banish it. A hero of "light hair and dark eyes" wandered with me through dreamland, appeared in the sunlit rays which woke me; indeed, followed me clear into the office, where every thing, not business and clothes, are supposed to be peremptorily "dropped."

By noon, his idealship was pretty well banished, however, and I started to lunch at the usual hour without him, till, coming to the corner of Wabash avenue and Adams street, the capers of a fractious horse disturbed the symmetry of travel, and a sudden huddle and halt of the "living stream" brought me face to face with as perfect a type of poor Dick's rival as could possibly be met with in a day's search. Such remarkably fine brown eyes! So deep set in shape, so liberal, kindly and frank in expression, so charming in contrast with the hair, whose "lightness" the rim of a very stylish and becoming Derby disclosed to be "whiteness," for my materialized ideal was an elderly, portly, handsome gentleman, of the type only to be met with on earth, I believe, in Paris, New York and Chicago—a thoroughly stylish, clean, healthy, business man!

The huddle of people, the sudden appearance, right before my eyes, of my ideal beautiful in man, recalling, as it did, the ridiculous quarrel of the night before, shocked me utterly out of all my usual demureness, all my theories on the subject of street-conduct, all my self-control; I smiled—one of my very best—straight into the middle of the brown eyes, which, I need not assure you, were not at all behind hand in a genuine response—with interest. A momentary hesitation of expectancy, refusal, regret, a polite raising of the becoming Derby, and we had parted—my ideal and I—for aye, and aye, and aye. Alas!

You think I did right, ne c'est pas?
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, CHICAGO, Oct. 20.—Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I am sorry to say, I must again disappoint you with sheets of "Coming Events." Night before last I slept but two hours, last night was utterly worthless, could do nothing rational in the way of work—I am so disturbed and unhappy!

FACE TO FACE.

What do you think happened Thursday! Just about the same place and same time, whom should I meet again, but my nice old gentleman. Oh, but he is handsome! with such a look—more than a look—that makes me want so much to know him. I know he would be such a good, true friend—and oh, my dear sir, I am so desolate of friends! He was carrying an umbrella, so was I, and we passed, like two ships at sea, as near as we dared; I with my stoniest glare, he with a merry twinkle in his eye, and a halt in his gait that told me, well as I wanted to know, that I need not walk alone to lunch that day, unless I wished. But I saw well enough that he was a wealthy gentleman, who, no doubt, would be only too glad to have a little sport with the heart of a poor little maiden, who would have naught but regret left to fill the emptiness in her life, after he had fled to pastures new.

Nevertheless, after passing, a strong desire possessed me to see how he walked, mayhap wherein he might turn on the avenue, that would give me some clue to his business, which desire was fed, as desires ever will be, by nothing less than W—'s great, big photograph-case standing way out on the pavement, with its shelter, and shade, and excuse, right on its beautiful face! Oh, why will people do that which they know they will be sorry for! And why will inanimate things conspire, in times of weakness, to lead the doubter towards regret! This apple of Sodom came in my way at my weakest, bidding me halt—just a moment—look at the pictures, and—look! I halted—just a moment—looked at the pictures, and—peeked! O ho! [illegible] my ideal, turned square around, stood stock still, umbrella over his shoulder, the whitest of white handkerchiefs in his hand! Of course he excused me to do some such graceless thing, and here I pass [illegible] right into the trap.

SKY PARLOR, [illegible].—Dear Sir: You see I have been quite industrious. I send you [illegible] this time. [illegible] did so good. [illegible] I have seen him [illegible] my nice old gentleman. He [illegible] I understand that I am no common flirt. He passes in respectful and unobtrusive manner, that is not indifference, but a [illegible] my interest in him [illegible]. One look, one word of intrusion or familiarity [illegible] would have settled the matter. All interest in him would have died on the spot. I loathe an [illegible]! He is all that is manly, self-controlled and gentlemanly. I do believe, my dear sympathizing mole, that I am more than half in love with light hair, dark eyes, fifty years and two hundred pounds!
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, Nov. 3.—Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I send you the next four chapters. You will say I must be going to the [illegible] I am so good.

One more episode in my romance, which I write with tears in my eyes. Last night I was standing at the corner of Washington and State streets waiting for the car. You know what an excessively sloppy, nasty night it was, and what a task it is to reach the cable at that hour, through such a jangle of every thing, and the mud, too. I was feeling particularly cross and uncomfortable. The rain was playing havoc with my pretty little rough suit, as the mud would with my neat shoes. I must have looked mad. I felt so—not daring to go on, not daring to wait, lest the rain should increase; when, with a great throb, that sent a new supply of blood, hope, courage and delight to every vein in my body, my heart saw, coming straight towards me, my dear old gentleman, with his certain, gracious manner, and his raised umbrella, which, with a respectful but firm "permit me," he held straight over the damp little turban, and, gently taking my arm, escorted me, through all the "jangle of every thing," to the car steps. But the bustle was not too great, nor the way too short nor difficult, to prevent his expressing, in—oh, such well-bred and new tones—how much he would like the pleasure of my acquaintance, and might he not hope some time, before very long, to call upon me at my home—might he not have my address to-night.

I PEEKED.

And of course—of course—why of course—I could not let him. Ah! but you can not know how I almost choked as I told him so. Oh! dear, can you think, I was so desolate, and I knew he was good and true.

"Oh, my dear sir," I said, "it is indeed impossible. Indeed, indeed, it is not that I have any objections to you, your own self, but, don't you see, if I let you—there is no—reason—why I—should—not let—anybody—at least, there is — nothing to prevent — your—thinking—I—would;—and" —I could say no more. I fancy he heard the great sob underneath, for in tones so low, not even the little rain drops falling about us could hear, he stooped and said, oh, so earnestly: "God bless and take care of you, my dear good little girl!" then stooping still lower, he kissed my hand, as respectfully as if I had been some great lady, and we were standing on the ball-room floor of some elegant home. The rain drops which splashed on the hard alligator side of my little sachel must have been cold on one side and warm on the other; cold for regret at the happiness I had thrown, willfully, over my shoulder, warm with the intense thrills of delight which any woman always feels at receiving the well-earned respect of a thoroughly manly man.
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, Nov. 10. — Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I send you a few more pages. I fear that I must bring "Coming Events" to a more abrupt conclusion than I had intended. It, or something, is wearing on me perceptibly. I can neither sleep nor eat. I shall make it up to you later.

Thanks for your kind personal interest, and your sympathy in my little romance, and desire for "more." I must tell you. The restaurant was awfully crowded yesterday, as it always is Saturdays. I had a very pleasant seat, however, with a vacant chair beside me, which the kind waiter always lets me have to hold my sachel and parcels. I went to writing as usual—most of "Coming Events" was begotten between "orders"—and so interested was I in Chapter 13, inclosed, that I did not notice the waiter coming my way, till, with a murmured "pardon," he removed my things and placed the newcomer therein. So absorbed was I that I never looked up, till the waiter's return, when, whom should I find sitting by my side, but "him!" And there lay your "note-heads" large as life, with your grandiloquent name tastefully scroll-bound in full, on the left-hand corner—M. L. De Verne, Editor-in-chief, Criterion.

What if he had seen it! Oh, what if he had, and was even now mentally denouncing that mosquito in petticoats, the "female reporter!" But he did not seem as if he had. His shapely, well-kept hands were nonchalantly joined at the tips, over the white cloth, and the wonderful brown eyes indifferently fixed on the awning over the rival restaurant across the way. No, I am sure he did not see; and I did not prolong his opportunity for so doing, I can assure you. He was immaculately dressed in a cool, fawn-colored suit, faultless linen, and the short white hair a la pompadour over the broad forehead, the whole set off by a nobby little button-hole bouquet—red and white. Had I been a native of Senegambia he could not have remained more utterly unconscious of my presence than he did, all through that cozy little meal we took there, side by side, but not together. And the dainty, sensible meal he ordered! Just what I should have chosen to serve him had I it to do. Ah me! ah me! And how daintily he dined! No hurry, no indecent haste. So different from the ravenous and disgusting manner of the "cheap-John" gobblers, who so offended my domestic taste every time I ate in a restaurant. He kept his dishes neatly arranged about him, so as not to interfere with anybody, and, as if anticipating the relief it would give, left the room first.

And there lay the dear little daisy at the other side of his plate. How did it get out of its compact little home? It must have fallen out. I could not bear to see so sweet a flower tossed into a gravy dish, so I put it into my little sachel. Ah, you dear little daisy, don't you tell!
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, Nov. 17.—Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I must disappoint you this week. I have been very ill. The doctor insists upon perfect rest. I shall try to send you some pages Thursday.
"TIGER."

SKY PARLOR, Nov. 25.—Editor Criterion.—Dear Sir: I send you the promised sheets. I am much better. The most exciting "episode" of all occurred a day or two after I sent my last "installment." I was feeling unusually blue. No doubt the effect of being sick and weak. Then the Thanksgiving season approaching, the sad past and lonely present came as never before so painfully to my mind. I could not bear the thought of the joyous anniversary, nor the hosts of happy, thankful people who would enjoy its pleasures. What had I to be thankful for? Life! So had the mollusks, and sponges, and corals of the great deep, who knew no cause. I had worked hard, [illegible] less, and suffered more than any [illegible] similarly situated, whom I [illegible]. Well, anyway I decided to stay away from the restaurant that day and arrange my own small bill of fare as nearly as possible in accord with the day. I had [illegible] taken home some cranberries, just because they were so pretty and [illegible], and, as an experiment, had stewed them over my little gas-heater and made most delicious sauce. I could do so again. This, with some turkey taken from the restaurant, rolls from my favorite bakery, and a box of candy would furnish me a meal fit for a queen. If she were a happy one at [illegible] the root of a similar one prepared by stranger hands. The balance I would include in an envelope to the little errand boy who was accustomed to bring errands to our office from R R & Co., whose wan face and pleasant smile had touched my heart and who was the only person I knew that I felt justified in pitying.

It was late when I reached "down town," and after getting my [illegible] errands, I was weak and trembling and I sat [illegible] to wait for the car. While I [illegible] jolted down a [illegible] the car bell startled me, and I jumped up hastily, gathering my [illegible] chicken, cranberries and the paper which I crumpled back in my hand as I ran. I had almost reached the step, when by some mis-sight, the conductor rang the bell. The next I knew I was rolling over and over, in the doubtful snow and slush, skirts in midair, bag rolling under the wheels and the unfortunate cranberries dripping through a hole in their bag, proclaiming in balls of crimson guilt my mortifying story to conductor, passengers, passers-by, and, horror of horrors! my dear old gentleman!!! For he it was whose strong arm righted me, as though I had slipped in the most simple and graceful manner possible, leading me to a seat in the car, as though we were returning from a picnic, brushing down the mud and snow striped "rough suit," as though brushing a butterfly from a lawn-tennis costume, and seating himself beside me, as though he had been my escort since the morning. I did not need to look for my bundles, there they all were, close beside him, minus the luckless cranberries.

"You must allow me to see you safely to your home," he said. "You are too weakly to be trusted alone." Whatever more he said was neither heard nor replied to; I could neither hear nor see, nor understand. After seeing me safely deposited in the musty little parlor, he added: "Now"—but I never heard the rest, for a senseless heap was all that was left of me, ten seconds after I touched the little lounge.

And the next voice I heard was the doctor's, and a very strictly professional voice it was, after the dear tender tones that had sent me to sleep!

CONTINUATION FROM PRIVATE DIARY.

And so I spent Thanksgiving Day in bed, and four days after. The fifth day a second form followed the doctor's into the parlor—which I had, for the first time, reached again—and shed its "light hair and dark eyes" upon the face of the little mirror which had reflected Dick's angry glances, the evening of our discussion of that fateful subject.

The doctor staid only long enough to feel my pulse, change my medicine and introduce me to his old friend and fellow-citizen. Oh, kindly earth, open and swallow me up!!! Ye, snows, fall in heaps and bury me from sight!!! Oh, sun, cease your cruel shining, and let a merciful darkness enshroud my crushed, humiliating self!!! for the doctor introduced me to—M. L. DeVerne, editor-in-chief Criterion, city, who for the last eight weeks had been receiving, in the private box of his editor-in-chiefship, the twin romances of "Coming Events" and my own dearly-bought story of self-proclaimed love and devotion for the "dear old mole, who would not disclose," and with whom my identification dated from that day when the brown eyes rested indifferently on the awning of the rival restaurant across the way after they had deliciously twinkled over their owner's name tastefully scroll-bound on the left-hand corner of the Criterion note-head, so accommodatingly displayed to his gaze.

"My dear old gentleman," indeed! "So handsome, so stylish and so clean." "How I longed to know him!" "How I longed to serve with hands of love, the dainty dinner brought by stranger hands!" Oh, you bad little daisy, what made you tell!

The scalding tears of shame burst from my eyes. I made a dash for the door, but a gentle, firm hold was on my wrist, gentle firm tones in my ear, and the "whitest of white handkerchiefs" wiping the tears from my eyes!

Before going, I promised to let him come and dine with me that evening; he sending in the dinner which should be served in that same little parlor, which was secured from intrusion, by a charm more potent than any possessed by the "Sky parlor" tenant.

What all happened that day need not be told.

Next day brought me a little package, which my weak happy hands could scarcely open, for joy at the dear familiar handwriting, not on official business. It contained a tiny box from Peacock's and the daintiest little volume bound in red morocco, entitled: "One Flirtation—One Thanksgiving—One Wedding—inscribed to my dear little wife," in which was reproduced, in daintiest type, on the most delicate paper, word for word of my letters to the "dear old mole," relating to a certain "romantic episode" which I felt sure he "would not disclose"—while clear, full-faced type impressively conveyed the more touching passages of love and admiration, which, like boomerangs, from my heart, had returned, after, lo, these many days.

The tiny box held a jewel the like of which is not to be met with in any jeweler's shop in the city, for was not Love caught in its diamond flashes, captured by the delicate circlet, inside which was inscribed the simple record: "Thanksgiving, 1885."

A few days later was added the following:

CHICAGO, Dec. 1.—To the Officers of the Criterion Publishing Company—Gentlemen: Inclosed please find concluding chapters of "Coming Events."

I beg to add that in view of a coming event which did not cast its shadow at their commencement, I herewith, by order of your editor-in-chief, tender you release from your part in the contract binding us in literary relations through the year '86.

With ever-living hopes for the success of your excellent magazine, I remain,
Yours very resp., "TIGER."

Number of Alpine Glaciers.

According to Prof. Heim, of Zurich, the total number of glaciers in the Alps is 1,155, of which 249 have a length of more than 7,500 meters. Of this number the French Alps contain 144, those of Italy 78, of Switzerland 471 and of Austria 462. The total superficial area of these glaciers is between 3,000 and 4,000 square kilometers, those of Switzerland amounting to 1,839 kilometers. The greatest length is reached by the Aletsch glacier, which is 24 kilometers long. As to thickness, it will be remembered that Agassiz, when measuring a crevass in the Aar glacier, did not reach the bottom at 260 meters, and that he calculated the depth of the bed of ice at a certain point of this glacier at 460 meters.—Geographical Bulletin.

ONE year ago last June Mrs. Warren Caswell, of Herkimer, while at the Thousand Islands, left her hand-bag, containing about twenty dollars in money and several small articles, on the boat. Search and inquiry was made for the missing bag without success. The other day Mrs. Caswell received an express package containing the missing bag and contents with five dollars added to the money. The package came from New Jersey, and a letter accompanied it. This is a clear case of "conscience."—Ogdensburg Journal.

LEADERS OF MEN.

Prominent Democrats Attend a Banquet in Chicago.

Annual Feast of the Iroquois Club—Addresses on the Tariff, the Treasury Surplus and Other Topics of Interest.

DEMOCRATS IN COUNCIL.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—It was a distinguished gathering which filled the great dining room of the Palmer House Wednesday night at the fourth annual banquet of the Iroquois Club. Inaugurated in the second year of the club's existence these banquets have become famous throughout the United States. The most momentous questions of the day being discussed by acknowledged leaders of the Democratic party on these occasions, the utterances at the Iroquois Club banquet lost the general air of the after-dinner speeches almost from the beginning and became a sort of unofficial platform to which the great majority of the party was strictly pledged. In one respect Wednesday night's gathering was of greater interest than the former ones, the presence of a Democratic Administration at the Nation's capital and the outcome of the last election. The utterances of the speakers upon these points lent additional importance to the occasion. Prior to the banquet a reception had taken place in the Iroquois Club's quarters, where the guests and members became acquainted.

Members of the club and their guests sat down to the grand banquet at the Palmer House at eight o'clock. The following letter of regret from President Cleveland was read:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Nov. 12. Edmund Furman, Esq., Corresponding Secretary. My Dear Sir: I regret exceedingly that official duties, just at this time unusually exacting and important, prevent my acceptance of your invitation to attend the fourth annual banquet of the Iroquois Club on the 17th inst.

"I am much impressed with the present importance of a thorough and timely discussion by the people of the various questions which are related to good government and the prosperity of the country and which, because they are so related, concern the welfare and success of the Democratic party.

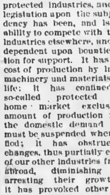
"In the work which must be undertaken of presenting these questions to the judgment of our citizens in such a manner as to remove misapprehensions, and aid a correct conclusion, I believe that the Iroquois Club will prove a most effective instrumentality.

"Hoping that the approaching banquet will be an occasion of pleasure as well as interest and usefulness, I am, yours sincerely,
"GROVER CLEVELAND."

Other letters were read from A. S. Hewitt, the newly-elected mayor of New York City; S. S. Cox, of New York; Roswell P. Flower, New York; S. B. Maxey, Paris, Tex.; James B. McCreary, Richmond, Ky.; United States Senator Eli Saulsbury, Delaware; John T. Morgan, Montgomery, Ala.

General Newberry made a neat speech of welcome amid much applause, and the first toast of the evening, that of "American Industries; Their Growth and Prosperity Can Not be Promoted by Unnecessary or Unequal Taxation," connected with the name of Speaker John G. Carlisle, was received with prolonged cheers. He said in part:

"American industries—and by these terms I mean to include every honest and useful occupation—can not be promoted by any system of taxation or any policy of legislation which discriminates between them and compels one to contribute a part of its own earnings to increase the profits or prevent losses in another. There should be no expatriated or persecuted industries in this country. There should be no ranks or degrees among the legitimate occupations of the people, nor any road to the favor or bounty of the Government not open to all alike. Mining and manufacturing and the occupations dependent upon them are great and valuable industries, and should be cherished and promoted in every proper way. They afford employment to many millions of capital and many thousands of laborers, and their products contribute largely to the wealth and comfort of the people; but they are not by any means the only American industries. In the households of the poor, in the fields and forests, in the mines and factories, in the stores and shops, on the railroads and canals and rivers, on the high seas—everywhere there are American industries struggling with the mighty forces of nature and subduing, combining and utilizing the elements of the earth and the air, and any view of our industrial system which fails to comprehend all these necessarily leads to partial and erroneous conclusions.

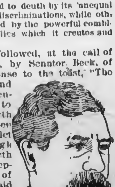


SPEAKER CARLISLE.

"Taking that broad view of these various industries, which comprehends the smallest as well as the greatest, and appreciates the interests of the whole instead of a part only, it is impossible to understand how their growth and prosperity can be promoted by taxation in any form. It is not difficult to see how a system which prevents competition, and therefore increases prices, may enable an individual who has capital invested in a particular industry to realize profits instead of suffering losses, but it is manifest that this must always be done at the expense of the consumers of his products, who are also, as a general rule, engaged in industrial pursuits. In every such case the actual losses are precisely the same as if competition had not been prevented and prices had not been increased, but, instead, of being borne by the individual who carries on the business, they fall upon the purchasers of his products and are paid out of the earnings in other industries. The other industries, therefore, not only make good his losses, but pay him a profit besides, thus giving him a bonus for investing his capital and wasting his skill and labor in an unprofitable business.

"That taxation for protective purposes has resulted, so far, in a continuous waste of capital and labor in this country is conclusively shown by the present condition of the so-called protected industries, and by the history of our legislation upon the subject. Its constant tendency has been, and is now, to impair their ability to compete with the products of similar industries elsewhere, and to make them more dependent upon bounties and special legislation for support. It has added largely to the cost of production by increasing the price of machinery and materials and the necessaries of life; it has confined the products of so-called protected industries to the home market exclusively, so that the amount of production must be regulated by the domestic demand alone, and operations must be suspended when that demand is satisfied; it has obstructed international exchanges, thus partially excluding the products of our other industries from profitable markets abroad, diminishing the earnings and arresting their growth and prosperity; it has provoked other Governments to resort to retaliatory measures discriminating against our products and trade in their own ports and markets, and giving preference to the products and trade of our most formidable rivals; and, here at home, by encouraging capital and labor to rely upon legislation for profits rather than upon their own capacity, it has greatly impaired that spirit of independence and enterprise which is absolutely indispensable to the successful prosecution of business in this age of improvement and progress. These are only a few of the evils which the existing system of taxation has inflicted upon the country. Many valuable industries, which would have flourished without it, have been tortured to death by its unequal burdens and unjust discriminations, while others have been crushed by the powerful combinations and monopolies which it creates and sustains."

Mr. Carlisle was followed, at the call of General Newberry, by Senator Beck, of Kentucky, in response to the toast, "The Treasury Surplus and the Tariff." The Senator first referred to the wonderful growth of Chicago, and then proceeded to depict the evils of the high tariff. He set forth Dalrymple as the representative farmer of America, and said that, after one season of economical farming, $10,000 had been realized in Liverpool, but at that point the farmer could not purchase his supplies for the coming year, on account of the American protective tariff. He, however, could purchase $10,000 worth of supplies there for $5,000, but, counting on the tariff, he found that he would be able to purchase the $5,000 worth of goods for $7,000 in this country, and, tariff considered, he would lose some $3,000 by the operation. Some one got the $2,000, probably the members of the House who voted for protection. Free trade produces to foreigners. Prohibitory protection produces none. The only difference between the two is the people would be closer, goods under free trade they get goods under protection and goods at half price always means double wages. The speaker continued:



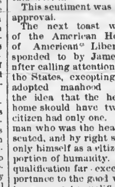
SENATOR BECK.

"A [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] We can not [illegible] [illegible] the treasury with bankrupting people [illegible] [illegible] nothing remains that I can see [illegible] to reduce [illegible] [illegible] for the wants of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] have the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] premium paid I shall [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] United States [illegible] [illegible] the amount [illegible] in the first [illegible] among the States in proportion to population and authorizing either party to cancel the transaction by giving the other six months notice. If the citizens of the several States do not take this proposition I would after ninety days make it free for all."

The next toast was "The Public Lands the People's Heritage for Homes," to which, at the request of President Newberry, W. A. J. Sparks responded. That gentleman contrasted the Republican and Democratic platforms of 1884 and the public domain question and then entered into a showing of the Republican administration of land grants to railroad corporations, setting forth, in the opinion of the speaker, wholesale swindles upon actual settlers and those who would otherwise have become actual and productive settlers. He reviewed the homestead and pre-emption laws and the whole history of the land question from the "ordinance of 1787" to the election of President Cleveland.

Ed S. Bragg, of Wisconsin, responded to the toast of the "President of the United States." General Bragg said that in the early years of Democratic rule the laborer received his just reward, but it was not so at present. Then the broad acres of the public domain were open to the actual settler. To-day they found labor discontent. This was the result of Republican rule, the dynasty of which party ended upon the election of Grover Cleveland. His election, however, was not a complete victory, for the Senate of the United States was not, as now constituted, in favor of reform, and he was therefore greatly handicapped. But he had already proved himself equal to the great occasion. If professional politicians did not find a champion in him the sober, honest, thinking people were ready to applaud his acts. [Applause.] The people of the United States to-day were seeking for economical truth, hence this was the day when revenue reform would be likely to win a victory. He predicted that Cleveland would be succeeded by a long line of Democrats.

The chairman read a letter from J. Sterling Morton, regretting his inability to attend. A heavy storm prevented crossing the Missouri river. Ex-Senator Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana, spoke to the sentiment "Benefits of a Democratic Administration to the Country." He was received with great applause. He said that the first fruits of actual Democratic victory were seen in the practical restoration of the Union. Under the several terms of Republican rule the union of the sections was nominal only. For campaign after campaign the Republican party revived the issues of the war, knowing that if those issues were forgotten it would retain no political capital. Another fruit was a practical administration of that Civil-Service reform about which the Republican party had for many years vainly resolved. With President Cleveland's manner of carrying out that reform idea Mr. McDonald could not fully agree. He thought the President went a little too far. The ex-Senator said:



JOS. E. M'DONALD.

"While ready to acknowledge that any man who holds office under the Government is not to receive credit on his official record for party services, but must be required to discharge all his duties well, yet it has seemed to me that when he has done that satisfactorily and has some leisure time on his hands, and goes out for the purpose of trying to persuade his fellow-citizen that this Administration is worthy of his confidence and support, he ought not to be chided for it."

This sentiment was received with yells of approval.

The next toast was "The Sanctity of the American Home, the Safeguard of American Liberty," and was responded to by James R. Doolittle, who, after calling attention to the fact that all the States, excepting Rhode Island, have adopted manhood suffrage, advanced the idea that the head of every family home should have two votes, while every citizen had only one. He urged that every man who was the head of a family represented, and by right should represent, not only himself as a citizen, but the feminine portion of humanity. He held that family qualification far exceeded in point of importance to the good welfare of the country a property qualification which was being strongly advanced by many.

Mr. L. G. Kinne, the last Democratic candidate for Governor of Iowa, responded at some length to the toast, "The Democratic Party," and Mr. F. W. Lehmann, of this city, spoke on "The Young Man in Politics." These addresses ended the night's festivities.

AN EXPLANATION.

President Cleveland Explains in a Straightforward Manner His Construction of the Term "Offensive Partisanship."

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19. — The President made public a letter from ex-District Attorney Benton, of Missouri, to the Attorney-General containing a statement of the engagements to speak made by him during the recent campaign, and showing that they did not interfere with the performance of the duties of his office. In the only cases where there was a conflict, Mr. Benton said, he canceled the engagement. Mr. Benton concluded his letter as follows:

"If making political speeches is the cause of my suspension, I can make no defense, but if it is inferred that I neglected my official duties by so doing I am not guilty, and ask a full scrutiny into the facts."

In his reply to Mr. Benton's letter the President said that when he issued his warning to office holders against a too active participation in political campaigns he expected to be harassed and annoyed with frivolous tales from political enemies concerning the pernicious political activity of office-holders under his Administration. The President continued:

"I did not intend to condemn the making of a political speech of a Federal official to his neighbors and friends, nor at any time and place where it was merely incidental, if the speech itself was decent and fair, but I do not think that such official can enter into, as a business, a political campaign and, consenting to a long list of engagements to address political meetings, widely separated and of daily occurrence, till such engagements without neglecting his duty nor without taking with him in the canvass his official power and influence. Therefore this course is condemned."

The President then went on to say:

"The correct line of conduct can be easily determined by divorcing the conduct of the citizen from the use of official influence. * * * Teaching the lesson to the people that public positions are not bestowed or held under a pledge of active partisan service."

In conclusion, the President said that he was led to believe that Mr. Benton's act was a "case of flagrant and defiant neglect of official duty and propriety," and added:

"But the statement in your letter showing that you did not permit campaign engagements to interfere with the performance of official duty, your satisfactory discharge of such duty during your term, and the belief in the truth of your allegation that you honestly supposed you might properly do all that was actually done, have induced me to rescind the order suspending you from office and reinstate you to the same."

Catarrh in the Head

Originates in scrofulous taint in the blood. Hence the proper method by which to cure catarrh, is to purify the blood. Its many disagreeable symptoms, and the danger of developing into bronchitis or that terribly fatal disease, consumption, are entirely removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which cures catarrh by purifying the blood and also tones up the system and greatly improves the general health of those who take it.

"For many years, beginning so far back I don't remember when, I had the catarrh in my head. It consisted of an excessive flow from my nose, ringing and bursting noises in my ears, and pains on the top of my head. The hawking and spitting were most excessive in the morning, when the back part of my tongue would be thick with a white fur, and there would be a bad taste in my mouth. My hearing was affected in my left ear. Five years ago I began to use Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was helped right away; but I continued to use till I felt myself cured. My general health has been good ever since the catarrh left me." MRS. E. H. CAULFIELD, Lowell, Mass.

OFF BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

William Kurz Makes the Leap with Suicidal Intention.

The Astonishment of the Driver of a Brewery Wagon.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—A brewery wagon started from the New York entrance at 1 o'clock to go over the big bridge to Brooklyn. After the wagon passed the New York pier a bridge policeman noticed something resembling a bundle of rags in the hind end of the wagon. This bundle assumed an upright position and turned out to be a man. The man jumped lightly from the wagon to the roadway, mounted the iron girder that inclosed it, and, without hesitating a moment, leaped off. He shot straight down into the river. [illegible] Ashore was the only one who had seen the man leap. He rushed into the roadway and ordered the driver to stop. The driver was surprised at the order, and demanded an explanation. On being informed it was evident from his astonishment that he was ignorant of the matter. He was allowed to proceed. The name of the man who made the leap is William Kurz. An eye-witness who was on the Dover street pier said to a reporter: "I was looking up at the bridge, and saw a man get over the railing next to a lamp post outside the New York tower. He clung to the rail for a moment, and then let go. He turned two somersaults in the air, and fell on his back in the water. He disappeared at once. The water seemed to suck him in, and the spray splashed up several feet in the air. Very few people were on the pier at the time, but several hundred gathered in a few moments, and there was great excitement." Policeman James O'Neal, of the Brigade Squad, arrived a few minutes later. He took the tug Columbia out to pick up Kurz. The captain of the lighter steamed out and picked up Kurz before the tug arrived. The jumper was under the water about five minutes. When picked up he was frothing at the mouth, and was too exhausted to speak. His face had a yellow look and his eyes were glassy and vacant in expression. When the lighter reached the wharf Kurz was placed in an express wagon and taken to the nearest Police Station, and from there to the Chambers street hospital. At the station he was able to talk. He told the officer in charge that he wanted to commit suicide. He complained of a pain in his head and side and began to rave. At the hospital he was found to be suffering from the shock of the concussion. It is thought that he will recover. When asked the reason for the jump, he replied: "I wish I was dead."

CAUSED BY EARTHQUAKES.

A Dam in Georgia Gives Way, Washing Out Several Hundred Yards of Railroad Track.

AUGUSTA, GA., Nov. 29.—The dam of Langley Pond was broken this afternoon at five o'clock, caused by the great pressure of water on the new portions just completed. As will be remembered the earthquake shocks on the night of August 31 caused the water to overflow and burst the dam, destroying a mile of railroad. The new dam had only been completed a few days and a full head of water had just been received, when suddenly the dam gave way, washing up both the South Carolina and the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta railroad tracks. The South Carolina track is washed up about four hundred yards, and the C. C. & A. for half a mile. No trains left the city to-night on these roads, and it will be to-morrow afternoon before any can go out, although a force of hands are now at work repairing both tracks. It will take some months to rebuild the portion of the dam washed away. The theory is that the earthquake shocks of last night caused the break.

Accepted Bids for War Ships.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—The Secretary of the Navy to-day accepted the following bids for the construction of the new cruisers and gunboats: Cruiser No. 2 (Charleston), Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, at $1,017,500; cruiser No. 3 (Baltimore), Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia, $1,325,000; gunboat No. 2, the Columbia Iron Works and Dry Dock Company, of Baltimore, at $247,000. In the case of gunboat No. 1 no decision has yet been reached as between the bid of Reeder & Sons and the bid of Cramp & Sons. Although the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, put in the lowest bid on cruiser No. 1 (the Newark), yet, as the figures exceeded the maximum amount fixed in the appropriation bill, the secretary was unable to accept their bid. He will probably refer the matter to Congress, with a statement of the facts, and recommend that the appropriation for the construction of cruiser No. 1 be increased, or that the Government be authorized to build the vessel at one of the navy yards.

New Consumption Treatment.

A method of treatment which is now attracting the attention of physicians is by injecting remedies directly into the lungs by means of the hypodermic syringe, the needle of which is passed through the wall of the chest, the effort being made to apply the medicinal agent as nearly as possible to the affected portion of the lungs. Some very encouraging cases are reported, in some of which the improvement has been so great as almost to justify one in speaking of them as cures. Carbolized iodine appears to have produced the best results, causing the complete cessation of cough and expectoration, and the further progress of the disease.—Science.

DARING SADIE ALLEN.

She Floats Through Niagara Whirlpool Rapids and Lands Desperately Sick.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 28.—George Hazlitt and Miss Sadie Allen of Buffalo went through the rapids and the whirlpool this afternoon in the [illegible]-shaped barrel used by Hazlitt and Potts last summer. They were in the rapids and whirlpool five minutes and were taken out of the eddy on the Canadian side just below the whirlpool three-quarters of an hour later in good condition. Miss Allen is a respectable girl, eighteen years old, a petite brunette, and pretty. The start was made from the Maid of the Mist landing, on the Canada side. When the barrel reached the maelstrom it shot right into the center of the pool, making two or three turns. Leaving the pool, the barrel followed the current out toward the Canadian shore down to the outlet of the pool, when it got into a large eddy and bobbed around for half an hour. Friends near by shouted to the occupants of the barrel, when Hazlett opened a small door on top of the barrel, and Frank Lawson threw a rope from the shore, which Hazlett secured, and the barrel was towed ashore. After coming out of the barrel, Hazlett and Miss Allen had a tramp of a mile and a half through brush and over bowlders before reaching the top of the precipice. Miss Allen, when she appeared at the ferry to enter upon the perilous journey, wore a neat walking dress. Taking off her hat and jacket and throwing a shawl over her head, she stepped lightly into the barrel through the manhole, tucking her garments closely about her, and laughingly remarking, "Come, George, jump in! I'm all fixed." Soon after George Hazlett stepped into the craft, fastening himself to the opposite end to that occupied by Miss Allen. Just thirty minutes from the time the barrel was towed out into the river it reached the whirlpool. After landing, Miss Allen was taken desperately sea sick.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Facts from the Annual Report of the General Superintendent.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The report of the General Superintendent of the Life-saving Service shows at the close of the last fiscal year the establishment embraced 211 stations, 165 being on the Atlantic, 38 on the lakes, 7 on the Pacific, and 1 at the Falls of the Ohio, Louisville, Ky. The number of disasters to documented vessels within the field of station operations during the year was 332. There were on board these vessels 2,726 persons, of whom 2,699 were saved, and twenty-seven lost. The number of shipwrecked persons who received succor at the stations was 867, to whom 2,091 days' relief in the aggregate was afforded. The estimated value of the vessels involved in the disasters was $4,428,330, and that of their cargoes $2,074,805, making the total value of property imperiled $6,502,135. Of this amount $5,073,078 was saved and $1,429,057 lost. The number of vessels totally lost was eighty-eight. The report says the number, violence and destructiveness of the storms which occurred during the year exceeded the record of any previous year since the general extension of the service on the sea and lake coasts. In one storm there were no less than thirty shipwrecks within the scope of the operations of the service and in a single day (January 9) there were twenty-three. The service, however, did not fail to match its previous record of effectiveness in saving life and property. The number of casualties was greater by twenty-eight than that of any former year, yet the loss of life is fifteen less than the average, and although the vessels and cargoes totally lost were twenty more than in any former year, the amount of property lost was only about $65,000 greater than the average for the preceding years, while the amount saved is increased by nearly $2,000,000.

ATROCIOUS

Murder of an Entire Family, and the House Burned With the Bodies In It.

LOUISVILLE, KY., Nov. 26.—It is learned here to-day that the family of eight persons, supposed to have been accidentally burned to death in Knox County, a month since, were murdered; their throat having been first cut from ear to ear. The family, whose name was Poe, had two neighbors whose reputation was not of the best, and on this account they forbade them entering their house. These neighbors, a man and woman, though not man and wife, had an illegitimate child, a boy, about ten years old. They lived some thirty yards from Poe's house, and becoming enraged because of being refused social recognition, planned the damnable plot of murdering the entire family. The boy, suffering under a severe chastisement from his reputed father, now tells the whole story. He says his mother was talking about the matter for several days, and that it culminated during a night when Mr. Poe was absent from home, and that when his father and mother left home for Poe's house they forbade his going with them, but that he slipped along without their knowledge, and saw them enter the house. The family, all of whom were females, were all asleep in one room, and his father with a razor cut the throats of each from ear to ear, while his mother picked the bodies up, placed them in the middle of the floor, piled the contents of two beds on them, and then set fire to them and the house, and that the poor, helpless little baby screamed until the flames smothered it. The man and woman have not as yet been arrested, but a sewing-machine, beds, and several other articles, recognized as belonging to the murdered family, were found beneath the house of the accused parties. There is no doubt of their guilt, and excitement has reached an intensity bordering on frenzy, so that it is more than probable the State will be saved the expense of a trial. Further particulars to-night shed additional light on the Knox County horror, and make it one of the darkest and most damnable crimes ever committed in the State, not excepting the Ashland affair some years since.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., Nov. 26.—At 11 o'clock this morning Judge Scott granted the supersedeas in the Anarchists' case. Messrs. Black, Swett and Solomon started at once to Ottawa to have the Clerk issue the order in pursuance to Judge Scott's instructions. The effect of the order for the supersedeas will be to delay the execution until the full bench of the Supreme Court has passed upon the questions raised for a new trial. It is estimated that in the ordinary course of procedure a hearing and decision can not be reached for six or eight weeks, and that even though the lower court is sustained the sentence can not be carried out until some time in March or April. Judge Scott's order granting the supersedeas is purely formal. Without going into any particulars, or giving any reasons, he simply certifies that in his opinion "there is reasonable ground for granting the writ."

TRIBUTE TO HONESTY.

President Cleveland's Fitting Reception at the Hands of Harvard's Scholars, Both Old and Young. Instructive Words.

There was a warmth and heartiness about the greeting extended to Mr. Cleveland in Boston that testified how close and strong are the bonds that unite him to the people. It was a spontaneous tribute to a faithful official, honest, straightforward public servant, who places duty before every thing and is staunch and true under all circumstances. In the oldest and most eminent university in America, surrounded by the most distinguished representatives of New England education and culture, the Democratic President was the recipient of honors and courtesies of which any man might be proud. From the revered president of Harvard down to the youngest graduate, every one was eager to testify his respect and admiration for Mr. Cleveland. While much of this enthusiasm was owing to the high office of the distinguished visitor, a very large proportion of it was caused by the sterling qualities which have characterized his public career. The unvarying success of that career, due to fidelity, high purpose and earnestness, was an example to the young men around him and a subject of admiration to their elders and professors. The occasion was one, also, calculated to inspire the most sluggish breast. Fair Harvard, young and vigorous, ardent and ambitious, after two hundred and fifty years of life, was in her gayest and brightest mood. Around her gathered her children, among them men of world-wide fame, all filled with the same affectionate feeling for their Alma Mater. To her were offered the noblest tributes that American lips could utter in Mr. Lowell's grand oration and Dr. Holmes' impressive poem. Most instructive to the young graduates were Mr. Cleveland's well considered words on the duties of American citizenship.

> After all it comes to this, the people of the United States have one and all a sacred mission to perform, and your President not more surely than every other citizen who loves his country must assume a part of the responsibility of demonstrating to the world the success of popular government. No man can hide his talent in a napkin and escape the condemnation his slothfulness deserves, nor evade the stern sentence which his faithlessness invites. In parting with you now let me express the earnest hope that Harvard's alumni may always honor the venerable institution which has honored them, and that no man who forgets or neglects his duty to American citizenship shall find his Alma Mater here.

It was a day to be remembered in the annals of Harvard and one worthy of the occasion and the distinguished assemblage. And in the opinion of many who attended the quarter millenial, the brightest feature there was the presence of "the handsomest Democrat in America."—Albany Argus.

A BROAD VIEW.

A Statement of the Encouraging Result of the November Election and the Good Prospects of the Democracy for 1888.

Every one naturally looks at the November elections with a view to their bearing upon the Presidency. There are two ways of contemplating those elections now in respect of the subjects to be decided in 1888. One way is to consider the comparative effect upon the fortunes of candidates. The other way is to consider the comparative effect on the voting strength of parties, that is to say, the division which would have taken place in the Electoral College if the Presidential election had been determined on the basis of the vote cast during the present month.

There are 401 electoral votes in the United States. Of the Electoral College 201 votes are a majority. In 1884 of these 401 electoral votes 219 were cast for Mr. Cleveland and 182 for Mr. Blaine. At the elections lately held States representing 207 electoral votes went unqualifiedly for the Democratic ticket, and of the original Republican States, Commonwealths aggregating 142 electoral votes went for the Republican ticket, without perceptible shrinkage. The remaining 52 electoral votes in the college were cast by States which are legitimately to be characterized as doubtful in the politics of the future, and which the result this year was very close—so close that in several of the States official returns will be required to decide for which party a majority of their people have cast their ballots.

It will thus be seen that if all the surely Republican States and if all the doubtful States were given to the Republican party, that organization would even then have but 194 votes against 207 securely held by the Democratic party. The opponents of the Democratic party will perceive that they must devise or discover some method of carrying the State of New York before they can hopefully expect to elect the President of the United States. New York seems to be a permanent stumbling-block in the way of such calculations. It has gone Democratic over a longer series of elections than any which have passed consecutively to the credit of the Republican party in this State in all the history of that organization.

New York went Democratic in 1882, in 1883, in 1884, in 1885 and again in 1886. The most elementary reasoning leads to the conclusion that the State should be expected to go Democratic in 1887 and in 1888, because the prestige, the future and the inclination of the party, victorious for four years in succession, will be enlisted in producing such a result, and because that party is now and then will be in executive control of the Government of the Commonwealth and of the United States.

The House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress will be securely Democratic. We may be sure that the next House of Representatives will be moderate, business-like and practical. We may be sure that the present House of Representatives, in its final session during the ensuing winter, will be marked by a chastening sense of responsibility, which will lend it to act cautiously, prudently, slowly, doing little more than passing the necessary appropriation bills, and not trying to revive or unsettle any of these large questions which the people have preferred should not be brought to a decision at the present time.

It will also be seen that many of the losses in Congressmen are due to local and personal causes. Districts West, South and East have got tired of voting for the same men. There was a disposition in many quarters to have new blood brought to the front. The result is seen in a Congress which contains perhaps a smaller proportion of re-elected men and a larger proportion of men new to public functions than any which has assembled for twenty years in the United States.

The President's friends very spiritedly maintain that any attempt to hold the Administration responsible for these local defeats and for those set backs is unfair. They declare that Mr. Cleveland has not [illegible] himself with the party [illegible], but that he has been reasonably [illegible] of the position, [illegible], and, relatively speaking, of the rights of politicians of large degree whose interest in the leadership of the party is affected by the results in contests of large proportions and in the control of large communities.

There is much to justify this conclusion. He who talks with men on the street, at their places of business, or on the avenues of travel, finds that the President is highly respected, that his honesty is admitted, that his firmness is appreciated, and that his homely, direct, personal way of doing things contrary to precedent and out of routine, has commended him to the people, as truly as it may have lost him the regard of that limited and superstitious class, the politicians by profession.

The President certainly has a coign of vantage in the Presidency itself which is not to be lost sight of. His Administration can not be regarded as a failure without a confession of judgment against the party itself. The inclination of Democrats to succeed on their own behalf must be made synonymous with the effort to represent that the administration of their own election has been successful also.

This does not mean that the party is bound to the renomination of Mr. Cleveland, or that Mr. Cleveland is bound to submit to a renomination and to place his leisure and a large portion of his future at the further disposition of the people, unless he shall so desire. But it does mean that the party is in good shape and that it is as able to make the present Democratic Administration an instrument in the perpetuation of Democratic control of the offices as it was to make the Jackson Administration a factor in the election of the Van Buren Administration and the Pierce Administration a factor in the election of the Buchanan Administration.

There is no disposition among Democratic statesmen and politicians to antagonize the President now, or in 1886 to commit themselves to an unalterable programme for 1888. But there is a realization of the collective strength of the Democratic party, and there is, so to speak, a reconsideration of the lessons of the late election, which strengthen and encourage the heart of the party, and which correspondingly depress the expectation and hope of its adversaries.—George Hope, in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Great Difference.

Secretary Lamar has been making some rattling speeches in the Southwest and telling the people that the United States is a pretty fair place to live in after all. Though he did not avoid the subject of the war and former sectional differences, he expressed the belief that the North and the South have reached a stage in their history when they can lock arms and march through "the corridors of time" to the music of the Union. Let us see—Secretary Lamar is a Southern man.

Mr. Blaine has been making a tour through Pennsylvania and New Jersey, doing his best to keep the old ante-bellum antagonisms alive. He has shaken them up as a kennel keeper lashes his dogs and sets them all yelping. Then in a magnificent peroration he described the tyranny of the whites and the oppression of the blacks until the groundlings were wild with delight.

It is a little odd that the South should accept the new order of things, while Mr. Blaine insists that unless the North hates the South it yields one of its greatest privileges and is recreant to its most important duty.—N. Y. Herald.

A Democratic Senate.

Every day brings fresh evidence that the elections resulted in a grand Democratic triumph. In addition to carrying Minnesota, California and Colorado, and reducing the Republican majorities in Iowa and Ohio, the party makes such gains in State Legislatures as will guarantee the complete obliteration of the Republican majority in the United States Senate.

In the present Senate the Republicans have a majority of eight. It was expected that there would be a slight reduction in this majority, but the most hopeful didn't anticipate that it would be wiped out in a single contest. The general belief was that by 1889 sufficient changes might be made to change the complexion of the body, but the late victory has made it possible by the fourth of March next.

This is the most important result of the elections. To have the support of the Senate to the Democratic Administration is strengthening the arm of the party more directly and effectively than any other agency could accomplish. With such a result the Democrats have no reason to complain of the late election.—Harrisburg Patriot.

Couldn't Carry Him.

The Boston Herald (Ind.) finds two causes for the decreased vote for the Republican candidate for Governor in Massachusetts. The first was the dissatisfaction with Mr. Ames. "The second cause," it says, "we find in the activity of Mr. James G. Blaine as a Republican leader. This revived the worst memories that pertained to the Republican party in its later action. It did more. It gave evidence which seemed to mark the further degeneration of the party. Mr. Blaine, appearing in public as a Republican leader, identified himself with the Republican party wherever it existed. He was a heavy load to carry in Massachusetts. Not alone the Independents, but many Republicans had come to feel that with Mr. Blaine's defeat two years ago there ought to be an end of him as a candidate for the Presidency. They saw him pressing directly to that goal again; they saw the Republican press of the State defending and even eulogizing his speeches; they saw—most discouraging of all—Mr. Blaine invited to take a part in their own canvass. They were disheartened and disgusted, and thus they became indifferent to the canvass."

It seems that of the State offices to be filled next August the office of Lieutenant-Governor is the most sought after, there now being over a dozen aspirants for that position. That office is considered the prize of the second-class politician, the crop of which in Kentucky is as abundant now as at any period in the history of the State.

There is a strong element in the Democratic party in this State that does not believe that a square deal can be had for a delegate from [illegible]tion and especially when it is held in Louisville, and they have good grounds upon which to base their belief.

A Washington correspondent says: "A young man, named Presley, pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing, at various times, four overcoats from guests of one of our leading hotels, and was sentenced by Judge Snell to two years imprisonment. Young Presley, who is about twenty-one years of age and has a rather good face, presented a pitiable spectacle. He said to a representative of the Capital that he came here from Kentucky a short time ago with the hope of procuring a position under the Government, but failing in this, and being unable to secure other employment was reduced to this deplorable condition.

The new revenue law has created great dissatisfaction in some parts of the State, and especially in those counties where fine horses and thoroughbred cattle are numerous. That class of stock has heretofore escaped assessment at prices higher than scrub stock, and that the owners are required to list it at figures approximating its value they are greatly dissatisfied. Judging from the tone of some of our exchanges, the Assessors in those sections are proceeding to assess in accordance with the law under which they are at work, and the day in which a $1,000 horse can be listed at $50 for taxation in Kentucky has passed, and the burden of taxation is to be shifted from the $25 plug to the fancy animal whose owner sees in him a small fortune.

The very low prices which tobacco has been bringing has forced a large tobacco house to the wall in Carrollton. It is only another example of the warehousemen letting a firm labor for them until a time when they will reap a large harvest by closing in on the country buyer. Nine out of ten of the buyers through the country have been working for the city dealers without compensation for several years and the numerous failures of country buyers has failed to teach them that they are completely at the mercy of the warehousemen. A country dealer who is handling tobacco bought with money furnished by a warehouse is at all times at the mercy of a set of fellows who will show him no favors at the very time he most needs them. If you have not the capital of your own upon which to operate, you would better keep out of the tobacco business.

Chas. A. Dana, of the New York Sun, antagonizes the above, with the following: "He should in most respects do differently from what he has done during the last two years."

Samuel Bowels, of the Springfield Republican, says: "He should steadfastly cling to the principles he enunciated in his letter accepting the nomination for the Presidency, and his letter of December 25, 1884, to Gen. Wm. Curtis."

F. W. Dawson, of the Charleston News and Courier, writes: "Let him go on to the end in the way he has been going from the beginning."

M. M. Gillam, of the Philadelphia Record, says that if he will fill the offices with wide-awake, representative Democrats as speedily as possible under liberally interpreted Civil Service rules, and allow the men so appointed to work for the party."

While in Burlington Prof. Fogg gave our townsman, W. E. Piper, some instructions on the cornet, and owing to his natural talent for music he is progressing rapidly, and will soon become quite an expert in the manipulations of that instrument.

Some of W. E. Piper's friends are anxious to know whether he intends engaging in the fish business or the fresh meat trade. They say he has purchased a horn and is practicing for one or the other. While others say he is preparing to attend all the Methodist camp meetings next season.

One day last week Tim and Charley Westbay armed with a shot-gun apiece went out to clean up the country of all the birds and rabbits. A few days our senior concluded that there were no stone trouts in the newspaper business, so he ventured into the live stock trade, and purchased of one of his neighbors a fat cow for $25, he paid $1 40 to have it taken to market, and then sold the cow for $20. He has been figuring every since trying to find out how much he made.

The Railroad Accident.

[illegible] Anderson and Keaton Heights it collided with a freight train, wrecking both engines and six or seven of the freight cars, and killing two men outright while several of the boys on the wild engine were very seriously scalded. A wreck under such circumstances is evidence of very great carelessness on the part of some of the road officials.

Teachers Association.

The Teachers' Association held at Beech Grove, Saturday, was well attended and Supt. Ryle called the meeting to order at 10:30. Thirteen live, enthusiastic, teachers were present, and the programme was represented better than ever before. Every subject but one was treated by those assigned duties, and to say the subjects were ably handled is only a mild way of expressing a fact. After an enjoyable forenoon the ladies spread a royal feast and entertained all in a manner that was heartily welcoming.

The duties of the afternoon were resumed with promptness and the programme being completed, other subjects of interest were introduced and discussed, after which the good of the Association was liberally discussed. Six teachers gave in their names, saying, "the cause is a good one, we will go with you."

Teachers, consult your own interests; consult your interest in the cause of education, and decide now that you will advance your own ideas; that you will consult your neighbor teacher, that you will not let the opportunity pass by unimproved, but will take membership with the Association, and in so doing attend, work, whether assigned duty or not, and convince your employes that you have the cause of education at heart.

The next meeting will be at Beaver Lick the 3rd Saturday in December. The time changed on account of the holidays.

A THANKSGIVING DINNER.

In which Five Generations Dined at the same Table.

Mrs. Harriet Cornelius, of Rising Sun, Indiana, gave a family dinner last Thursday, at which she hoped to get her family all together, but owing to the unfavorable conditions of both the roads and weather, quite a number were unable to be present, but those who did get there were made very happy by the meeting. When the dinner hour arrived, the guests repaired to the dining room, and partook of a most excellent dinner which did great honor to the housekeeper, Miss Fannie Hayes, who prepared the savory repast with her own hands. Among those present were, Mrs. Eliza Riddell and daughter, Thomas Marshall and family, William Barker and family, Mrs Nannie Lewis, Charlie Stevens and wife and Miss Hattie and Lewis Stevens, and few days will be remembered by the family as having passed so pleasantly.

Mrs Harriet Cornelius was formerly a resident of the Petersburg neighborhood in this county, where she was well known by many who still reside there. She is now nearly 89 years of age, has one child living, five grandchildren, fifteen great grand-children and four great, great grand-children, and she still possesses sight to see them and hearing to converse with them, while her mind is unclouded. All these blessings are still hers.

Her son, Thomas, was a teacher in the Boone county schools a number of years ago, and some of Boone's thrifty farmers are his old pupils, and he often inquires about them. For many years he has been in such poor health that he takes no enjoyment.

The Methodist Meeting.

The Methodist meeting at this place closed last Thursday evening after a very successful month's service, there being 21 additions to the church during the meeting.

Rev. Southgate, who has charge of the Covington district preached at 11 o'clock that morning to a very large congregation, and at the close of the sermon the work of securing subscriptions to assist in providing the Methodist congregation with a church building in Burlington was taken up, and in a short time the subscription called for $830, which is very encouraging to the members of that church. At the close of the forenoon meeting the congregation was invited to the Court-house, the court-room of which had been metamorphosed into a commodious dining room, where an elegant and abundant dinner greeted the large crowd which did ample justice to the numerous turkeys and viands in the preparation of which the good cooks had excelled themselves.

The demands of the inner man having been thoroughly administered to, the congregation again repaired to the church where the organization of the church which was not completed in the forenoon, was again taken up, and when completed was as follows:

Stewards—Frank Kirkpatrick and J. C. Mack.

Church Trustees—J. H. Kirkpatrick, J. T. Cooper, S. D. Kirkpatrick, Albert Gray and [illegible]

Class Leaders—Geo. F. Piper, Clarence Kirkpatrick and John W. Palmer.

Wonder if Thobe [illegible] in support of the [illegible] contest [illegible]

[illegible] that the ballot boxes of Gallatin county were in possession of the county Clerk unlocked and unsealed, and in a condition to be tampered with and that the election officers of the county were all Democrats and were not sworn. On these grounds it is asked that the county be thrown out. The petition avers that in Grant county the election officers were all Democrats and unsworn. The vote in Gallatin county, according to the petition, should have been returned 134 for Carlisle and 30 for Thobe instead of 151 for Carlisle and 74 for Thobe, as the canvassing board allowed. The returns of that county, the petition claims, were all doctored in Carlisle's favor. As to Campbell county the allegation is set forth that the Democrats had more election officers than the law entitled them to, that those officers were not sworn and that the ballot-boxes were tampered with. The returns from Carroll county according to the petition were doctored according to the majority need to elect Carlisle. It is further avowed that in some of the precincts the polls were closed at 4 p. m., in violation of law, and that a judge of election in one of them was stone blind. And also that election officers refused to count for the contestor, votes where Carlisle's name was scratched off and Thobe's written in; the rejection of the entire vote of the county is asked. Fraud is alleged in every precinct in Boone except Walton. Among other allegations it is claimed that there were only seven Republican election officers in the county. The petition prays that every precinct except Walton be thrown out. In Pendleton county the closing of the polls at 4 p. m. is charged. In Kenton county illegal voting is charged. It is also alleged that the police force, controlled by Jacobson, Carlisle's brother-in-law, stood at the polls all day electioneering for Carlisle, and prevented the friends of Thobe from voting—that Collector Davison violated the Civil Service rules by actively electioneering for Carlisle. The petition closes with the assertion that Thobe is legally and rightfully elected to Congress, and a demand for the seat.

Wonder if Thobe swore to all of the above stuff.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.
VERMIFUGE
Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.
Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

CHINESE PEACEMAKERS.

How They Are Respected in the Land of Rice.

Belligerents Commence Their Fight by Beating Themselves—Curious Instances of How Disputes Were Settled—"Repainting His Front Door."

China is probably the most peaceable and peace-loving nation in the world. Its Government has submitted to gross wrongs and acts of injustice at the hands of other Powers without recourse to war, and sometimes without even a protest, such as, if attempted toward any Western nation, would have caused a bitter struggle and much shedding of blood. The highest honors which, as a State, it has to bestow upon its people, are to be sought and found in the line of civil promotion. Not the great General, but the popular and successful magistrate or ruler, is the man who may hope for and receive the highest honors from the Emperor. Its only privileged class is that of the students or scholars.

A great difference has existed in this respect between China and Japan. In the latter Government the privileged class has been the samorai, or "two-sworded men;" that is, the military. And in recent times, during the reorganization of Japan by its present able rulers, this class has given great trouble, and attempted at least one revolution. This important difference between those two great Eastern nations may be correctly stated by saying that for hundreds of years the Chinese have been taught the arts of peace, and the Japanese the art of war. Yet though the Chinaman is not warlike, he is, as an individual, quarrelsome. This may seem to be a distinction without a difference, and yet there is a difference; it may seem to be very strange, and still it is a fact. The average Chinaman always goes about with his little chip of pride, conceit and self-esteem nicely balanced upon his shoulder, waiting and watching for some one to knock it off. The never-ending code of etiquette tends largely to develop and help on this quarrelsome disposition.

If your Chinese cook calls his Chinese friend, your bottle washer, by his given name, instead of addressing him as "Venerable Elder Brother," there is ill-feeling aroused at once, though the two may be old friends and even relatives. If a Chinaman enters a room where another is seated, and the other does not rise to receive him, there may be high words about it. If a Chinaman meets an acquaintance whose queue is coiled on his head, and that queue is not at once brushed down and straightened out, there is a quarrel.

On one occasion the wife of the writer sent a servant with a note to a lady friend, directing him to bring back an answer. He did so, but brought the reply to the writer in the office, who directed him to take it into the house. He took it to the servants' quarters, intending to give it to the butler to deliver to the mistress; but as the butler was absent he handed it to another house-servant, with the words:

"The master says you are to give that to the mistress."

"Why don't you take it yourself?" was the reply.

"Ugh! Is that the way you talk to me?" said the first.

In an instant they had grasped each other by the queue, and were pulling each other about the yard, screaming out abusive language, and making noise enough generally for a mob. The writer was forced to go and pull them apart, and it was only after they had been tied, each by the queue, to two hitching-posts in the stable-yard for half an hour, that they cooled down, apologized to the master, begged each other's pardon, and were reconciled.

But Chinese quarrels, as a rule, are very harmless affairs, in which only the lungs and fingers of the parties are called into use. They generally begin by mutual fault-finding in an ordinary voice. The voice gradually rises, while "the tone of conversation" is lowered, until each is screaming out at the top of his lungs the most abusive language about the wife, sister, mother, grandmother and female relatives generally of the other. Then each tears off his garments and strips himself naked above the waist. The screaming continually increases in violence. Then each, still screaming and "calling names," hammers himself on the chest with his doubled fists, until you would think he would beat in all his ribs. This gymnastic exercise having been completed, each seizes the other by the queue, close up to the head, and they pull each other about until they are tired, or until they are separated.

But the interference, the peace-making, is so regular, so universal, in every Chinese dispute, as to have become a thorough and constitutional part of it, and no description of Chinese character would be complete in which that were omitted. At a certain stage in the proceedings, generally after the hair-pulling has begun, two of the bystanders, quite frequently strangers to each other and to the parties quarreling, will interfere, taking them to [illegible] each other and become friends. [illegible]

It is a remarkable fact in a Chinese quarrel that it is always perfectly [illegible] no matter how bitter the struggle may be, [illegible] of the bystanders [illegible] the thanks of the parties separated, as well as the esteem of all other witnesses.

The writer has often thought that in no country in the world does that beatitude found in the Sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are the peacemakers," [illegible] practical [illegible] than in China. [illegible] For reasons that need not be given, [illegible] interfere in a quarrel between a man and a woman. While the time may come when the role of peace-making [illegible] may safely be adopted in the United States, it would probably not be wise to venture [illegible] at present.

Once the writer saw a crowd of perhaps a hundred persons gathered by the side of the street in Peking, near the residence of some Americans. Pushing his way into it, he saw the usual Chinese quarrel going on, two men being engaged in pulling each other's queues, while their upper garments lay in two little piles near at hand. Not thinking it wise to allow such a disturbance to go on, he spoke to the fighters and told them to stop. They paid no attention. Then, putting his hand upon the shoulder of one of them, he spoke somewhat louder, telling them to stop their quarreling. The one touched merely twisted his head sufficiently to enable him to see who the speaker was, but no other notice was taken of his words. Then the writer grasped each man by his queue as close to the head as he could, one queue in each hand, and by a sudden, vigorous pull, dragged them apart.

Pointing to their clothes, he said,

"Pick up your garments and come along with me."

Without a word, and apparently without a thought of refusal, they gathered their coats and girdles from the ground, put them on and walked with him down street, the whole crowd following.

Having gone about a third of a mile, and reaching a cross street, the writer said to one of them, pointing to the south: "You go that way," and to the other, pointing to the north: "Go that way." Away each went as directed, without a moment's hesitation, and, for aught the writer knows to the contrary, they are still traveling, one north and the other south.

The following curious incident, showing one manner in which disputes are settled in Peking, and the way taken to show outsiders that justice has been done, can not fail to interest the reader. In January, 1881, the butler employed by the writer, and who had been in his service some ten years, informed him that he must leave his position. Upon being asked for his reasons, he stated that on the previous evening he had gone out after dinner and had thoughtlessly locked the room which he and the firemen occupied together, and had taken the key with him. The fireman was also out, and, upon coming home about eleven o'clock, was, of course, unable to enter his room. He could easily have gone into a room with another servant for the night, but refused to do so, because very angry, and going to the residence of the butler's family near by, he had worked himself into a violent passion, raved and stormed up and down the street, calling the butler's wife and mother all manner of evil names and had effectually roused the entire neighborhood.

Having performed in this manner for about an hour, he returned to the Legation and went to bed with another servant, as he ought to have done in the first place. The butler added that the offense was so serious and so public that he had decided to "take the law" to the fireman, and as it would not be decent to take such a step when both remained in the master's service, he must beg to be released.

I pointed out to him, in the first place, that no Chinese court could take notice of his complaint so long as the fireman remained in the service of an officer of the Legation. Hence it would be idle for him to give up his position unless the fireman were also discharged. In the second place, I pointed out to him, that to take the matter into the courts would only serve to let five hundred people hear the bad words used when not more than fifty people had heard it in the first instance. I promised to look into the matter carefully, and if the facts were as stated, to see that the fireman was properly dealt with. I urged the butler not to leave his place, and not to take any further steps until I had made an effort to settle the difficulty. To this, after some hesitation, the butler consented.

The writer then sent for the fireman and asked for his side of the story. Strangely enough, it agreed entirely with what the butler had said. The fireman admitted that he was entirely in the wrong, said he was very much ashamed of what he had done, and promised to submit to any punishment which the master saw fit to inflict. He was spoken to very sharply about his offense, and told plainly that had he been a foreigner, his words, if used towards the family of another foreigner, would very likely have cost him his life.

After allowing the matter to rest two or three days, the butler and fireman were summoned before the master and their fellow-servants. The master recited the facts, which both admitted to be correct. The fireman then confessed his fault, and went upon his hands and knees before the butler, knocking his head three times upon the floor by way of begging pardon. He was then sent with the butler and another servant to the butler's house, where he made a similar apology to the wife and mother whom he had insulted. This was the Chinese way of settlement, and with it the writer supposed the trouble had ended, as the injured party said he was satisfied.

But two days later the butler came to his master again to say that while he and his family were satisfied with the apology made; yet the insulting words had been shouted in the ears of all the neighbors, who knew nothing about the fireman's confession and apology, that the neighbors were already looking askance at him, and, to quote the exact words used by him, "Unless he could find some way to repaint his front door"—that is, find some way to make the fireman's apology public—the neighbors would refuse to have any thing to do with him, and might drive him out of the neighborhood.

The writer admitted the force of this point, and after a moment's thought, said:

"Well, I think you are right. And I will fine the fireman half a month's wages, and pay you the money. Then you can tell your neighbors that I have done so. Here is the money, and I will take it out of his wages at the end of the month."

These dollars were handed to the butler. But he refused them, saying: [illegible] I can't do that. It would [illegible] The neighbors would then say that I had allowed my family to be insulted for three dollars."

"Well, what shall I do with the money?"

The butler replied: "[illegible] give it to one of the other servants, telling him what it is for, and he will know how to use it."

This was done. The money was given to the groom, who was told to use it in whatever manner he thought best to satisfy the neighbors of the butler that the fireman had made due reparation. The writer presumed that the money would be spent for a feast at which the neighbors would be invited, and at which the fireman would publicly repeat his confession and apology.

But three days later the groom came to his master and said:

"I have attended to that matter which you gave me. I paid a dollar and forty cents for paint, and a dollar for a painter. The work has been done, and I have sixty cents left. What shall I do with it?"

The writer, astonished beyond measure, said:

"I don't understand you. What do you mean about paint and a painter?"

The groom explained then that the butler had meant literally what he had said about "repainting his front door;" that it was a custom in Peking that in similar cases of insult to the members of a family, the front door should be freshly painted at the expense of the person guilty of the insult, as a public act of apology and retraction. Hence he had caused the butler's door to have a new coat of paint, and thus public opinion was satisfied, and the insulted dignity and wounded honor of the butler were avenged! The groom was directed to return the sixty cents, cash balance in hand, to the fireman.—Chester Holcombe, in Youth's Companion.

CAPE COD FISH-WEIRS.

Interesting Description of Their Structure and Practical Utility.

The first fish-weirs built in Cape Cod waters were very crude affairs, made of brush interlaced with laths, and were put down thirty or forty years ago, principally along the shore of Sandy Point, Chatham. Later others were built at different points through Vineyard Sound and Buzzards Bay. They were very slender structures, unable to stand the storms, and the business failed to prove a bonanza.

About twenty years ago a similar experiment was tried at Pamet Harbor, Truro, built of poles and laths, but this was abandoned as a failure after one season's trial. Nothing more was done in this vicinity at weir building until about the year 1880, when a trap, which had been used that summer in the Bar Chaleur, was taken up, brought to North Truro and put down for a short time in the fall. The poles of this trap were fastened into large rocks and kept in an upright position by those means, instead of being imbedded in the sand, and the poles were hung with netting instead of being interlaced with laths.

The venture proved a success on account of easy access to the Boston markets with the fresh fish. For the next four or five years the growth of the business was very rapid, until now twenty deep-water weirs can be counted from Long Point, Provincetown, to the boundary line between Truro and Wellfleet, along the inside shore of Cape Cod. The off-shore ends of the traps are in water about forty feet deep, and one hundred and thirty poles, either oak or hickory, from twenty to sixty feet long are used in the construction of each trap. These poles are mostly brought from Connecticut and last about two years each. About twenty-one hundred feet of netting, "made in sections for ease in handling," is used on each trap. Every trap is also provided with an extra set of netting, which is changed once a month in the summer time. The nets become so badly fouled up that it takes three horses to drag from the water what one horse can drag back after the cleaning is over. The nets are thoroughly tarred each spring before being put on.

The fact that fish, when pursued or frightened, invariably turn off shore for safety in deep water, is taken advantage of in constructing the traps. The poles are driven a short distance apart in a straight line from the shore for fifteen hundred feet, which is called the header. At the end of this the poles are driven in the shape of a heart, with the point off shore, and an entrance on each side where it joins the header, making it somewhat resemble an arrow.

The fish when swimming along strike the header, and naturally turning off shore for safety follow the header until they find themselves inside the heart, from which they seldom escape, as they always seek deeper water; instead of trying to get out the way they come in. At the point of the heart the poles are driven in a circle and connected with the heart. This circle, which has netting on the bottom as well as the sides, is called the bowl.

For ease in handling, the fish are driven from the heart into the bowl, the wet bottom and sides of which are drawn closer together and the fish bailed into the boats by small dip nets. At other times, when fish are plenty, they are driven from the heart into the bowl, leaving the heart clear for another school.

The traps at this place cost on an average $5,000 each, which includes one large sail-boat, two dories and a large fish-house two or three stories high on the shore. The crews, consisting of a captain and six men, work on what is termed "half-lay," which means one-half of the net receipts, after paying freight, packing, carting and commissions on the fish sold. The owners take the other half, which means dividends for the owners and small wages for the men.

Of the products of the weirs the mackerel is the principal dependence of the fishermen; next is the bait catch which is sold to the Gloucester fishing vessels in shore and Georges fleets at $1.50 to $2 per barrel, who carry it to the fish grounds packed in ice. Until the present year large quantities of herring have been caught. The large mackerel only are salted, the other sizes, also cod and other market fish, being shipped fresh to the commission dealers of Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Every kind of fish is taken in the traps, from the monster sea turtle to the electric eel and the tiny smelt. Some of the specimens found are exceedingly rare and curious. The season begins about April 1 and ends at Christmas. The crews assist at putting down and taking up the weirs. The amount of capital invested in this business in the town of Truro is estimated at $40,000.—North Truro (Mass.) Cor. Boston Globe.

GROWING GRASS-SEED.

Why Great Care Should Be Exercised in Its Selection and Cleansing.

The growing of grass-seed, especially timothy and clover, has always been a favorite branch of agriculture in the West, and especially in the newer sections of the country. One principal reason for this is, prices have been at such a figure per bushel that it would stand transportation for long distances. So profitable has this been, including flax, that prices have considerably declined and they are also on [illegible] Nevertheless, improved processes in reaping, threshing and cleaning have enabled as good a profit to be obtained there [illegible] as in any other crop.

The complaint made, both from the East and from Great Britain, is of foul seed. That is, timothy, clover and flax seed are said to be not only dirty but full of seeds of foul weeds. A New England contemporary says: "Nearly all the timothy seed in market comes from the West, and it is every year more difficult to get that free from weed seeds, especially plantain. For the sake of getting pure seed some Eastern farmers are obliged to grow and thresh their own."

The grass-seed field with the seeds of plantain, certainly does not come largely from the West. It is comparatively a rare field weed in the West. But the assertion is perhaps well founded in respect to the fact that much of the seed is dirty, and also contains the seeds of weeds. It can only be due to bad practice in cultivation and cleaning. The West first acquired the confidence of Eastern farmers in the value of its grass seed through its freedom from the seeds of Canada thistle. It is so to-day. This pest does not flourish well in our alluvial prairie soils. Many other weed seeds do. If the allegation of Eastern parties in relation to the impurity of Western grass seeds is true, the remedy lies with the farmers. We have mills and separators that will clean seed perfectly from all others. No seed should be sent out as delivered from the thrasher. It will pay to clean it in the most perfect manner, for all dealers "dock" the waste out of the seed they buy. In other words, the price paid is enough to leave an ample price for cleaning the seeds and a good margin besides. It will pay all seed-raising farmers especially to sow none but clean grass and clover seed on clean land if they expect to hold its integrity in the markets of the world.

There is one other thing to be remembered in the cultivation of grass or clover for seed. It is most exhausting to the soil. Hence the land should be in good heart, and not more than two crops of grass seed should be taken, or at most three, before the field is given up to pasture, and thereafter to be again brought into the regular rotation of farm crops.—Chicago Tribune.

COWS FOR THE DAIRY.

Some of the Essential Points to Be Considered in Their Selection.

It is hardly to be expected, in a country of so great diversity of soil, climate and elevation as ours, that there should not be as great diversity in the breeds of cows adapted thereto. It is a wise man who has the faculty of adapting a breed to a situation, or rather the practical experience to determine whether the soil and situation is fully calculated to the purpose of dairying as a special business.

To succeed in dairying, the pastures must be flush and long continued, and the means of providing rich food in winter ample and cheap. Next, and no less essential, there must be plenty of pure, living water. Then again, some means must be available where fine butter is to be made, of holding a comparatively low temperature. These assured, there is certainly no manufacture connected with the farm that promises better returns, if discrimination has been used in the selection of the cows or the establishment of the breed to be kept.

Whatever the breed, the cows must give large messes of milk, and long continued, for no man can succeed in dairying who expects to milk cows through the season and when dry turn them off for beef, depending upon picking up others for the supply. This course never held a herd that would give milk enough to make dairying profitable. The dairy of cows that will not average four hundred gallons of milk per cow for the year had better be discarded. The higher one can raise the average above this by judicious feeding the greater the profit. We say judicious, for the man who overfeeds for a record on cows does so at a cost never compensated in dollars and cents for the milk obtained. Judicious feeding means the best food that can be made on the farm, supplemented, for variety, with bran and other millstuff that may usually be bought cheaply, due care being taken, while feeding as much as can be properly digested, not to overfeed. Hence the best dairy cow is the one that can eat and digest the most grass, and turn it into milk instead of fat: for grass is, and must ever be, the main food during the larger part of the year.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

CAUSE OF THE MIRAGE.

The Explanation of the Phenomenon and When It Is Visible.

The cause of the mirage is extremely simple. It is merely the difference in density of contiguous strata of the atmosphere. It usually occurs when from any cause, as the radiation of heat from the earth, the stratum of air lying near the surface of the earth in any locality is rendered less dense than the stratum above it. In this case rays of light from a distant object situated in the denser medium—that is, a little above the earth's surface—will strike the rarer surface at a very obtuse angle, and be reflected backward. Thus if a spectator is situated on an eminence and looking at a distant object in the same stratum of air, he will see the object by directly transmitted rays, and, besides this, rays from the object will be reflected from the upper surface of the rarer stratum of air beneath. The image produced will be below the real object and inverted. In certain states of the atmosphere only a part of the rays are reflected and thus two images are formed, one by refraction and one by reflection, the first erect, the second inverted. Sometimes, objects that are distant, and beyond the range of vision because of the curved surface of the earth, are made visible; this is simply caused by the refraction of the atmosphere. The mirage of the desert, which takes the appearance of a lake or sheet of water, is the reflection of the sky or a cloud. As the reflection surface is irregular and constantly varies its position, owing to the continual communication of heat to the upper stratum, the reflected image will be constantly varying, and present the appearance of water ruffled by the wind. This form of mirage will often deceive experienced travelers. A mirage frequently seen in the Straits of Messina is known as the "Fata Morgana." Another remarkable instance of mirage is the "Specter of the Brocken." Remarkable instances are also on record as seen on the Baltic coast and in the Arctic regions. Though only common in certain localities, the mirage may appear anywhere where conditions are favorable.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

Grape Pie.—One cup and one half of sugar, one heaping teacupful of grapes. Beat the egg and sugar together, then add the grapes, one tablespoonful of flour and a little butter. Bake with two crusts.—[illegible]

Large green peppers are very nice prepared in this way: Remove all the seeds and fill the pepper with cooked tomato, pulp and minced mushrooms, seasoning with salt and butter. Bake in a hot oven and serve.—[illegible]

There is no better plan for freeing rooms and sources of mildew than to burn sulphur in them. The rooms should be effectually closed and not opened for one hour after being filled with the sulphur fumes.—Good Housekeeping.

Waffles: Take half a pint of milk, about a tablespoonful of butter (melt before adding to the other ingredients), one teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, a little salt, as a matter of course, and flour enough to make a batter stiffer than for griddle cakes. These waffles come from the iron crisp and delicious.—Housewife.

A correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle says that a fact not generally known, but which proves the wonderful instinct of bees, is that they collect from only one description of plant or tree at a time, as from mignonette, lavender, thyme, heath or lime tree. When a bee is engaged in collecting from one of these species it lets the others alone, according to this writer.

—Coffee Ice Pudding: Pound two ounces of fresh roasted coffee in a mortar, but do not reduce them to powder. Put them into a pint of milk with six ounces of loaf sugar, boil up, then leave it to get cold, strain it on to the yolks of six eggs in a double saucepan, and stir over the fire till the custard thickens. When quite cold, work into it one and a half gills of cream whipped to a froth, freeze it, lay it in a plain mould, and set in ice till wanted.—Toledo Blade.

—Our coldest winters draw heavily from the vitality of the hardiest trees. If we move trees the spring following one of these winters, and add the shock of transplanting to the effect of the intense and protracted cold, the tree fails to grow, or just simply throws a few leaves, and lingers two or three years, never amounting to any thing. If those trees had been dug the previous autumn and properly buried, they would have been in fine condition to plant in the spring.—New England Farmer.

—The farmer who makes the best garden is he who plants in season upon land prepared in the most thorough manner and most heavily-manured with well-rotted manure. For all early crops the land should have been carefully plowed in the fall, since it saves lumpy soil in the spring. If not, do not plow until the soil will thoroughly disintegrate in turning the furrow. Beets, carrots, parsnips, onions, salsify, lettuce, peas, radishes, etc., should be sown as early as the ground can be worked.—Chicago Standard.

SUCCESS IN FARMING.

The Only Way of Making Agricultural Pursuits Profitable.

Farming does not mean simply stirring the soil, sowing the seed and harvesting the crops, but from the beginning of the year to its end there should be a constant production in every possible manner. While the crops are growing the future food is being prepared, but as soon as it is harvested it should be made still more serviceable by being converted into some higher-priced product. While an acre of land may produce fifty bushels of corn on its part, yet that corn may nearly all find its way back to the soil that produced it, only that portion being sold that will repay the cost and labor of converting it into beef, mutton, pork, wool, muscle or whatever it may contribute. The farmer who can so manage as to secure the largest crops, and return to his soil the larger portion by disposing of that which is more readily salable in some other shape, will gradually become wealthy, though the actual receipts may be apparently small.

Farming is a continuous operation. It is the changing of products from one kind to another according to the demand for each. In estimating the value of a bushel of corn produced on the farm, and fed to stock, it must be regarded as cheaper to the farmer than to any other person, since he does not have to transport it to market; and when charging it to his animals as food he should deduct from the market cost the expense which he would otherwise incur for bagging, handling, hauling and freight. The true value of the corn is that which it produces. The rule of charging interest for the corn as a crop, and also on the beef or milk derived from it, often causes the accounts to appear unfavorable. It is the first disposition of the crop that regulates its value. If it disappears from the farm in the carcass of the steer, it stands in the same position as if the steer grew upon the land instead of the corn, the corn being only the component part of the steer in the shape of marketable beef. If the crop be fed to the cow, and the milk sold off the farm, the crop is simply sent away in the milk-cans in place of bags, and, instead of being compelled to sell the entire crop to realize a certain sum, the change of form by conversion into some other product results in the securing of an equal sum from only a portion of the crop. Hence the farmer should aim to sell as little as possible off the farm. That is, he should endeavor to secure the largest sum possible with the smallest amount of product by converting all crops into those that are less bulky and command the higher prices. But the farming business requires system. It calls for the use of all kinds of suitable machinery and stock. As no manufacturer of cotton goods can afford to weave his goods with hand looms, neither can a farmer expect to make farming profitable unless he takes advantage of all opportunities open to him. If his crops are to be fed on the farm and rendered serviceable in producing something else through the agency of stock, such stock must be perfectly adapted to the purposes designed. The largest possible increase at the least cost and in the shortest period of time should be the rule, and upon this depends the turning point between profit and loss.—Philadelphia Record.

To Tell the Age of Eggs.

We recommend the following process (which has been known for some time, but has been forgotten) for finding out the age of eggs and distinguishing those that are fresh from those that are not. This method is based upon the decrease in the density of eggs as they grow old. Dissolve two ounces of kitchen salt in a pint of water. When a fresh laid egg is placed in this solution it will descend to the bottom of the vessel, while one that has been laid on the day previous will not quite reach the bottom. If the egg be three days old it will swim in the liquid, and if it is more than three days old it will float on the surface, and project above the [illegible] more and more in proportion as it is older.—La Nature.

—Fruit growers, gardeners and small farmers find the bill for fertilizers quite an item of expense, much of which could be saved if proper care was used in composting their manure and availing themselves of all the fertilizing matter within their reach. To properly compost farmyard manure requires considerable labor, but it is richly repaid. Every farmer should have a compost heap which should be under shelter and so arranged that the excrements can not dissolve and soak away.—Detroit Tribune.

Rev. A. A. Horton, of Sheffield, Pa., was walking home from Tiona the other night when six men stopped him and demanded his money. He handed them thirty cents. They searched him for more, but found none, and told him to go on. Before he went Mr. Horton made this remark: "Gentlemen, excuse the expression, the next time you hold up a stranger, be sure that he is not a Methodist preacher."—N. Y. Sun.

A station indicator is the latest invention, recently patented by a young lawyer of Nashville, Tenn. A Sad Case of Poisoning is that of any man or woman afflicted with disease or derangement of the liver, resulting in poisonous accumulations in the blood, scrofulous affections, sick headaches, and diseases of the kidneys, lungs or heart. These troubles can be cured only by going to the primary cause, and putting the liver in a healthy condition. To accomplish this result speedily and effectually nothing has proved itself so efficacious as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which has never failed to do the work claimed for it, and never will.

Rheumatism

According to the best authorities, originates in a morbid condition of the blood. Lactic acid, caused by the decomposition of the gelatinous and albuminous tissues, circulates with the blood and attacks the fibrous tissues, particularly in the joints, and thus causes the local manifestations of the disease. The back and shoulders are the parts usually affected by rheumatism, and the joints at the knees, ankles, hips and wrists are also sometimes attacked. Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive and permanent cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying and vitalizing action on the blood, corrects the cause of the disease, and it also gives strength to every function of the body. If you suffer from rheumatism try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"About a year ago I was pretty well run down, being troubled with rheumatism and indigestion, and my blood being very poor. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and it gave me great relief." JOHN LEWIS, Torrington, Conn.

Mrs. M. A. Dauphin, of Philadelphia, is well known to the ladies of that city from the great good she has done by means of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She writes Mrs. Pinkham of a recent interesting case: "A young married lady came to me suffering with a severe case of Prolapsus and Ulceration. She commenced taking the Compound and in two months was fully restored. In proof of this she soon found herself in an interesting condition. Influenced by foolish friends she attempted to evade the responsibilities of maternity. After ten or twelve days she came to me again and she was indeed in a most alarming state and suffered terribly. I gave her a table-spoonful of the compound every hour for eight hours until she fell asleep, she awoke much relieved and evidently better. She continued taking the Compound, and in due season she became the mother of a fine healthy boy. But for the timely use of the medicine she believes her life would have been lost."

THE MESSAGE.

President Cleveland's Second State Paper.

Decidedly Strong Ground Taken on Tariff Reduction.

The Civil Service Laws—A Discussion of Our Foreign Relations—The Fisheries Question—Cutting Case, Etc.

To the Congress of the United States:

In discharge of a constitutional duty, and following a well established precedent in the Executive office, I herewith transmit to the Congress at its reassembling certain information concerning the state of the Union, together with such recommendations for legislative consideration as appear necessary and expedient. Our Government has consistently maintained its relations of friendship towards all other powers, and of neighborly interest toward those whose possessions are contiguous to our own.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Few questions have arisen during the past year with other governments, and none of those are beyond the reach of settlement in friendly counsel. We are as yet without provision for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against Chili for injuries during the late war with Peru and Bolivia. The mixed commissions, organized under claims conventions, concluded by the Chili government with certain European States, have developed an amount of friction which we trust can be avoided in the convention which our representative at Santiago is authorized to negotiate. The cruel treatment of inoffensive Chinese has, I regret to say, been repeated in some of the far Western States and Territories, and acts of violence against those people beyond the power of the local constituted authorities to prevent and difficult to punish, are reported even in distant Alaska. Much of this violence can be traced to race prejudice and competition of labor, which can not, however, justify the oppression of strangers whose safety is guaranteed by our treaty with China equally with the most favored nations.

In opening our vast domain to alien elements, the purpose of our law givers was to invite assimilation and not to provide an arena for endless antagonisms. The paramount duty of maintaining public order and defending the interests of our own people, may require the adoption of measures of restriction, but they should not tolerate the oppression of individuals of a special race. I am not without assurance that the Government of China, whose friendly disposition towards us I am most happy to recognize, will meet us half way in devising a comprehensible remedy, by which an effective limitation of Chinese emigration, joined to protection of those Chinese subjects who remain in this country, may be secured. Legislation is needed to execute the provisions of our Chinese convention of 1880 touching the opium traffic. While the good will of the Colombian Government toward our country is manifest, the situation of American interests on the Isthmus of Panama has at times excited concern and invited friendly action looking to the performance of the engagements of the two nations concerning the territory embraced in the interoceanic transit. With the subsidence of the Isthmean disturbances, and the erection of the State of Panama into a Federal District, under the direct government of the constitutional administration at Bogota, a new order of things has been inaugurated which, although as yet somewhat experimental and affording scope for arbitrary exercise of power by the delegates of the national authority, promises much improvements. The sympathy between the people of the United States and France, born during our colonial struggle for independence, and continuing to-day, has received a fresh impulse in the successful completion and dedication of the colossal statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" in New York harbor, the gift of Frenchmen to Americans. A convention between the United States and certain other powers for the protection of submarine cables was signed at Paris on March 14, 1884, and has been duly ratified and proclaimed by this government. By agreement between the high contracting parties this convention is to go into effect the 1st of January next but the legislation required for its execution in the United States has not yet been adopted. I earnestly recommend its enactment. Cases have continued to occur in Germany giving rise to much correspondence in relation to the privilege of sojourn of our naturalized citizens of German origin revisiting the land of their birth, yet I am happy to state that our relations with that country have lost none of their accustomed cordiality. The claims for interest upon the amount of tonnage dues illegally exacted from certain German steamship lines were favorably reported in both Houses of Congress at the last session, and I trust will receive final and favorable action at an early day.

The recommendation contained in my last annual message in relation to a mode of settlement of the

in the waters of British North America, so long a subject of anxious difference between the United States and Great Britain, was met by an adverse vote of the Senate on April 13 last, and thereupon negotiations were instituted to obtain an agreement with Her Britannic Majesty's Government for the promulgation of such joint interpretation and definition of the article of the convention of 1818, relating to the territorial waters and inshore fisheries of the British Provinces, as should secure the Canadian rights from encroachment by the United States fishermen, and, at the same time, ensure the enjoyment by the latter of the privileges guaranteed to them by such convention. The question involved are of long standing, of grave consequence, and from time to time, for nearly three-quarters of a century, have given rise to earnest international discussion, not unaccompanied by irritation. Temporary arrangements by treaties have served to allay friction, which, however, has revived as each treaty was terminated.

The last arrangement, under the treaty of 1871, was abrogated after due notice by the United States on June 30, 1885, but I was enabled to obtain for our fishermen for the remainder of that season enjoyment of the full privileges accorded by the terminated treaty. The Joint High Commission by whom the treaty had been negotiated although invested with plenary power to make a permanent settlement, were content with a temporary arrangement, after the termination of which the question was relegated to the stipulations of the treaty of 1818, as to the first article of which no construction satisfactory to both countries has ever been agreed upon.

The progress of civilization and growth of population in the British provinces to which the fisheries in question are contiguous, and the expansion of commercial intercourse between them and the United States, present to-day a condition of affairs scarcely realizable at the date of the negotiations of 1818. New and vast interests have been brought into existence. Modes of intercourse between the respective countries have been invented and multiplied. The methods of conducting the fisheries have been wholly changed; and all this is necessarily entitled to candid and careful consideration in the adjustment of the terms and conditions of intercourse and commerce between the United States and their neighbors along a frontier of over 3,500 miles. This propinquity, community of language and occupation and similarity of political and social institutions, indicate the practicability and obvious wisdom of maintaining mutually beneficial and friendly relations. Whilst I am unfeignedly desirous that such relations should exist between us and the inhabitants of Canada, yet the action of their officials during the past season toward our fishermen has been such as to their continuance. Although disappointed in my efforts to secure a satisfactory settlement of the fishery question, negotiations are still pending, with reasonable hope that before the close of the present session of Congress announcement may be made that an acceptable conclusion has been reached.

As at an early day there may be laid before Congress the correspondence of the Department of State in relation to this important subject, so that the history of the past fishery season may be fully disclosed and the action and the attitude of the Administration clearly comprehended, a more extended reference is not deemed necessary in this communication.

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate, I communicated to that body on August 2 last, and also to the House of Representatives, the correspondence in the an American citizen, then imprisoned in Mexico, charged with the commission of a penal offense in Texas, of which a Mexican citizen was the object. After demand had been made for his release the charge against him was amended so as to include a violation of Mexican law within Mexican territory. This joinder of alleged offenses, one within and the other exterior to Mexico, induced me to order a special investigation of the case, pending which Mr. Cutting was released. The incident has, however, disclosed a claim of jurisdiction by Mexico, novel in our history, whereby any offense committed anywhere by a foreigner, penal in the place of its commission, and of which a Mexican is the object, may, if the offender be found in Mexico, be there tried and punished in conformity with Mexican laws. This jurisdiction was sustained by the courts of Mexico in the Cutting case, and approved by the executive branch of that Government, upon the authority of a Mexican statute. The Appellate Court in releasing Mr. Cutting decided that the abandonment of the complaint by the Mexican citizen aggrieved by the alleged crime (a libelous publication) removed the basis of further prosecution, and also declared justice to have been satisfied by the enforcement of a small part of the original sentence. The admission of such a pretension would be attended with serious results, invasive of the jurisdiction of this Government and highly dangerous to our citizens in foreign lands, therefore I have denied it, and protested against its attempted exercise as unwarranted by the principles of law and international usages.

When citizens of the United States voluntarily go into a foreign country they must abide by the laws there in force and will not be protected by their own Government from the consequences of an offense against those laws committed in such foreign country, but watchful care and interest of this Government over its citizens are not relinquished because they have gone abroad, and if charged with crime committed in the foreign land a fair and open trial, conducted with decent regard for justice and humanity, will be demanded for them.

It appearing that the Government of Spain did not extend to the flag of the United States in the Antilles the full measure of reciprocity requisite under our statute for the continuance of the suspension of discriminations against the Spanish flag in our ports, I was constrained, in October last, to rescind my predecessor's proclamation of February 14, 1884, permitting such suspension. An arrangement was, however, speedily reached, and upon notification from the Government of Spain that all differential treatment of our vessels and their cargoes, from the United States, or from any foreign country, had been completely and absolutely relinquished, I availed myself of the discretion conferred by law, and issued, on the 27th of October, my proclamation declaring reciprocal suspension in the United States.

It is most gratifying to bear testimony to the earnest spirit in which the Government of the Queen Regent has met our efforts to avert the initiation of commercial discriminations and reprisals, which are ever disastrous to the material interests and the political good will of the countries they may affect. The profitable development of the large commercial exchanges between the United States and the Spanish Antilles is naturally an object of solicitude. Lying close at our doors and finding here their main markets of supply and demand, the welfare of Cuba and Porto Rico and their production and trade are scarcely less important to us than to Spain.

Their commercial and financial movements are so naturally a part of our system that no obstacle to fuller and freer intercourse should be permitted to exist. The standing instructions of our Representatives at Madrid and Havana have for years been to leave no effort unessayed to further these ends, and at no time has the equal good desire of Spain been more hopefully manifested than now. The Government of Spain, by removing the Consular tonnages, fees on cargoes shipped to the Antilles and by reducing passport fees, has shown its recognition of the needs of less trammeled intercourse.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury exhibits in detail the condition of

and of the several branches of the government related to his department. I especially direct the attention of the Congress to the recommendations contained in this and the last preceding report of the Secretary, touching the simplification and amendment of the laws relating to the collection of our revenues and in the interest of economy and justice to the Government. I hope they may be adopted by appropriate legislation.

The ordinary receipts of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, were $336,439,727.06. Of this amount $192,905,023.44 was received from customs, and $116,805,936.48 from Internal Revenue, with the total receipts, as here stated, were $13,749,020.68 greater than for the previous year, but the increase from customs was $11,434,084.10, and from Internal Revenue $4,407,210.94, making a gain in these items for the last year of $15,841,295.04, a falling off in other resources reducing the total increase to the smaller amount mentioned. The expense at the different Custom Houses of collecting this increased customs revenue was less than the expense attending the collection of such revenue for the preceding year by $490,608, and the increased receipts of internal revenue were collected at a cost to the Internal Revenue Bureau of $155,944.99 less than the expense of such collection for the previous year.

The total ordinary expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, were $242,483,138.50, being less by $17,788,797 than such expenditures for the year preceding, and leaving a surplus in the Treasury at the close of the last fiscal year of $93,956,588.56, as against $63,463,771.27 at the close of the previous year, being an increase in such surplus of $30,492,817.29.

The expenditures, as compared with those of the preceding fiscal year, are classified as follows: For civil expenses, year ending June 30, 1886, $21,955,604.04; year ending June 30, 1885, $23,826,942.11. For foreign intercourse, $1,332,320.88; $5,439,609.11. For Indians, $6,099,158.17; $6,552,492.63. For pensions, $63,404,864.03; $56,102,267.49. For the military, including river and harbor improvements and arsenals, $34,324,152.74; $42,670,578.47. For the navy, including vessels, machinery and improvements of navy yards, $13,907,887.74; $16,021,079.69. For interest on public debt, $50,580,145.97; $51,386,256.47. For the District of Columbia, $2,892,321.89; $3,499,650.95. Miscellaneous expenditures, including public buildings, light houses and collecting the revenue, $47,986,683.04; $54,728,056.21.

For the current year to end June 30, 1887, the ascertained receipts up to October 1, 1886, with such receipts estimated for the remainder of the year, amount to $356,000,000. The expenditures ascertained and estimated for the same period are $266,000,000, indicating an anticipated surplus at the close of the year of $90,000,000. The total value of the exports from the United States to foreign countries during the fiscal year is stated and compared with the preceding year as follows.

	Ending June 30, 1886.	Ending June 30, 1885.
Domestic merchandise	$665,964,529	$726,682,946
Foreign merchandise	13,560,301	15,506,809
Gold	42,952,191	8,477,892
Silver	29,511,219	33,753,633

The value of some of our leading exports during the last fiscal year, as compared with the value of the same for the year immediately preceding in here given, and furnishes information both interesting and suggestive:

	For the y'r end'g J'ne 30, 1886.	For the y'r end'g J'ne 30, 1885.
Cotton and cotton manufactures	$219,045,576	$213,799,049
Tobacco and its manufactures	30,424,908	24,767,305
Breadstuffs	125,846,558	160,370,821
Provisions	90,625,216	107,332,456

Our imports during the last fiscal year, as compared with the previous year, were as follows:

Merchandise	$635,436,136	$579,580,053
Gold	20,743,349	26,691,696
Silver	17,850,307	16,550,627

In my last annual message to the Congress attention was directed to the fact that the exceeded its actual needs, and it was suggested that legislative action should be taken to relieve the people from the unnecessary burden of taxation thus made apparent. In view of the pressing importance of the subject I deem it my duty to again urge its consideration.

The income of the Government by its increased volume and through economies in its collection is now more than ever in excess of public necessities. The application of the surplus to the payment of such portion of the public debt as is now at our option subject to extinguishment, if continued at the rate which has lately prevailed, would retire that class of indebtedness within less than one year from this date. Then a continuation of our present revenue system would soon result in the receipt of an annual income much greater than necessary to meet government expenses, with no indebtedness upon which it could be applied. We should then be confronted with a vast quantity of money, the circulating medium of the people, hoarded in the treasury when it should be in their hands, or we should be drawn into wasteful public extravagance with all the corrupting national demoralization which follows in its train.

But it is not the simple existence of this surplus and its threatened attendant evils which furnish the strongest argument against our present scale of Federal taxation. Its worst phase is the exaction of such a surplus through a perversion of the relations between the people and their Government, and a dangerous departure from the rules which limit the right of Federal taxation. Good government, and especially the government of which every American citizen boasts, has for its objects the protection of every person within its care in the greatest liberty consistent with the good order of society and his perfect security in the enjoyment of his earnings, with the least possible diminution for public needs. When more of the people's sustenance is exacted through the form of taxation than is necessary to meet the just obligations of the government and the expense of its economical administration, such exaction becomes and a violation of the fundamental principles of a free government. The indirect manner in which these exactions are made has a tendency to conceal their true character and their extent. But we have arrived at a stage of superfluous revenue which has aroused the people to a realization of the fact that the amount raised professedly for the support of the Government is paid by them as absolutely if added to the price of the things which supply their daily wants, as if it was paid at fixed periods into the hands of the tax-gatherer.

Those who toil for daily wages are beginning to understand that capital, though sometimes vaunting its importance and clamoring for the protection and favor of the Government, is dull and sluggish till, touched by the magical hand of labor, it springs into activity, furnishing an occasion for Federal taxation and gaining the value which enables it to bear its burden. And the laboring man is thoughtfully inquiring whether in these circumstances, and considering the tribute he constantly pays into the public treasury, as he supplies his daily wants, he receives his fair share of advantages. There is also a suspicion abroad that the surplus of our revenues indicates abnormal and exceptional business profits which under the system which produces such surplus increase without corresponding benefit to the people at large the vast accumulations of a few among our citizens, whose fortunes, rivaling the wealth of the most favored in antidemocratic nations, are not the natural growth of a steady, plain and industrious republic. Our farmers, too, and those engaged directly and indirectly in supplying the products of agriculture, see that, day by day, and as often as the daily wants of their households recur, they are forced to pay excessive and needless taxation, while their products struggle in foreign markets with the competition of nations which, by allowing a freer exchange of productions than we permit, enable their people to sell for prices which distress the American farmer.

Our farmers and agriculturists, those who from the soil produce the things consumed by all, are, perhaps, more directly and plainly concerned than any other of our citizens in a just and careful system of Federal taxation. Those actually engaged in, and more remotely connected with this kind of work number nearly one half of our population. None labor harder or more continuously than they; no enactments limit their hours of toil, and no interposition of the Government enhances to any great extent the value of their products, and yet for many of the necessaries and comforts of life, which the most scrupulous economy enables them to bring into their homes, and for their implements of husbandry they are obliged to pay a price largely increased by an unnatural profit, which, by the action of the Government, is given to the more favored manufacturer.

I RECOMMEND THAT,

keeping in view all these considerations, the increasing and unnecessary surplus of national income annually accumulating be released to the people by an amendment to our revenue laws which shall cheapen the price of the necessaries of life, and give freer entrance to such imported materials as by American labor may be manufactured into marketable commodities. Nothing can be accomplished, however, in the direction of this much needed reform unless the subject is approached in a patriotic spirit of devotion to the interests of the entire country, and with a willingness to yield something for the public good.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The sum paid upon the public debt during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, was $44,551,043.36. During the twelve months ended October 31, 1886, three per cent. bonds were called for redemption amounting to $127,283,100, of which $81,613,200 was so called to answer the requirements of the law relating to the sinking fund, and $45,670,000 for the purpose of reducing the public debt by application of a part of the surplus in the Treasury to that object. Of the bonds thus called $102,269,450 became subject under such calls to redemption prior to November 1, 1886. The remainder, amounting to $25,013,650, matured under the calls after that date.

In addition to the amount subject to payment and cancellation prior to November 1, there were also paid before that day certain of these bonds, with interest thereon, amounting to $5,072,350, which were anticipated as to the maturity, of which $2,664,850 had not been called. Thus $107,341,800 had been actually applied prior to the 1st of November, 1886, to the extinguishment of our bonded and interest-bearing debt, leaving on that day still outstanding the sum of $1,153,443,112. Of this amount $86,848,700 were still represented by three per cent bonds. They, however, have been since November 1, or will at once be, further reduced by $22,606,150, being bonds which have been called as already stated, but not redeemed and cancelled before the latter date.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, there were coined under the compulsory silver coinage act of 1878 29,838,905 silver dollars, and the cost of the silver used in such coinage was $23,448,960.01. There had been coined up to the close of the previous fiscal year under the provisions of the law 203,882,554 silver dollars, and on the first day of December, 1886, the total amount of such coinage was $247,131,549. The Director of the Mint reports that at the time of the passage of the law of 1878 directing this coinage, the intrinsic value of the dollars thus coined was 94¼ cents each, and that on the 31st day of July, 1886, the price of silver reached the lowest stage ever known, so that the intrinsic or bullion price of our standard silver dollar at that date was less than 72 cents. The price of silver on the 30th day of November last was such as to make the dollars intrinsically worth 78 cents each. These differences in value of the coins represent the fluctuations in the price of silver, and they certainly do not indicate that by the Government enhances the price of that commodity or secures uniformity in its value.

Every fair and legal effort has been made by the Treasury Department to distribute this currency among the people. The withdrawal of United States Treasury notes of small denominations and the issuing of small silver certificates have been resorted to in the endeavor to accomplish this result in obedience to the will and sentiments of the representatives of the people in the Congress. On the 27th day of November, 1886, the people held of these coins, or certificates representing them, the nominal sum of $166,873,041, and we still had $79,464,345 in the treasury, as against about $142,894,055 in the hands of the people and $72,865,376 remaining in the treasury one year ago.

The Director of the Mint again urges the necessity of more vault room for the purpose of storing these silver dollars which are not needed for circulation by the people. I have seen no reason to change the views expressed in my last annual message on the subject of this compulsory coinage, and I again urge its suspension on all the grounds contained in my former recommendation, reinforced by the significant increase of our gold exportations during the last year, as appears by the comparative statement herewith presented, and for the further reasons that the more this currency is distributed among the people the greater becomes our duty to protect it from disaster; that we now have abundance for all our needs and that there seems but little propriety in building vaults to store such currency when the only pretense for its coinage is the necessity of its use by the people as a circulating medium.

The report of the

gives a detailed account of the administration of his department, and contains sundry recommendations for the improvement of the service which I fully approve. The army consisted at the date of the last consolidated return of 2,103 officers and 24,946 enlisted men. The expenses of the department for the last fiscal year were $36,990,903.38, including $6,294,305.43 for public works and river and harbor improvements. I specially direct the attention of Congress to the recommendation that officers be required to submit to an examination as a preliminary to their promotion. I see no objection, but many advantages in adopting this feature, which has operated so beneficially in our navy department as well as in some branches of the army.

The subject of

and fortifications has been fully and carefully treated by the Board on Fortifications, whose report was submitted at the last session of Congress, but no construction work of the kind recommended by the Board has been possible during the last year from the lack of appropriations for such purpose. The defenseless condition of our sea coast and lake frontier is perfectly palpable. The examinations made must convince us all that certain of our cities named in the report of the Board should be fortified, and that work on the most important of these fortifications should be commenced at once; the work has been thoroughly considered and laid out, the Secretary of War reports, but all is delayed in default of Congressional action. The absolute necessity, judged by all standards of prudence and foresight, of our preparation for an effectual resistance against the armored ships and steel guns and mortars of modern construction which may threaten the cities on our coasts, is so apparent that I hope effective steps will be taken in that direction immediately.

THE APACHES.

In September and October last the hostile Apaches who, under the leadership of Geronimo, had for eighteen months been on the war-path, and during that time had committed many murders and been the cause of constant terror to the settlers of Arizona, surrendered to General Miles, the military commander, who succeeded General Crook in the management and direction of their pursuit.

Under the terms of their surrender as then reported, and in view of the understanding which these murderous savages seemed to entertain of the assurance given them, it was considered best to imprison them in such manner as to prevent their ever engaging in such outrages again instead of trying them for murder. Fort Pickens having been selected as a safe place of confinement, all the adult males were sent thither and will be closely guarded as prisoners. In the meantime the residue of the band who, though still remaining upon the reservation, were regarded as unsafe and suspected of furnishing aid to those on the war path, had been removed to Fort Marion. The women and larger children of the hostiles were also taken there, and arrangements have been made for putting the children of proper age in Indian schools.

show marked and gratifying improvement during the past year. A particular account of its transactions and condition can be found in the report of the Postmaster General, which will be laid before you. The reduction of the rate of letter postage in 1883, rendering the postal revenues inadequate to sustain the expenditures, and business depression, also contributing, resulted in an excess of cost for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, of eight and one-third millions of dollars. An additional check upon receipts by doubling the measure of weight in rating sealed correspondence and diminishing one half the charge for newspaper carriage was imposed by legislation which took effect with the beginning of the past fiscal year, while the constant demand of our territorial development and growing population for the extension and increase of mail facilities and machinery necessitates steady annual advance in outlay, and the careful estimate of a year ago upon the rates of expenditure then existing contemplated the unavoidable augmentation of the deficiency in the last fiscal year by nearly $2,000,000. The anticipated revenue for the last year failed of realization by about $64,000, but proper measures of economy have so satisfactorily limited the growth of expenditure that the total deficiency in fact fell below that of 1885. And at this time the increase of revenue is gaining in ratio over the increase of cost, demonstrating the sufficiency of the present rates of postage ultimately to sustain the service. This is the more pleasing because our people enjoy now both cheaper postage, proportionably to distances, and a vaster and more costly service than any other upon the globe.

I again urge a change in the

FEDERAL JUDICIAL SYSTEM

To meet the wants of the people and obviate the delays necessarily attending the present condition of affairs in our courts. All are agreed that something should be done, and much favor is shown by those well able to advise. To the plan suggested by the Attorney General at the last session of Congress and recommended in my last annual message. This recommendation is here renewed together with another made at the same time.

THE INDIAN QUESTION.

The President says: There is no authority of law for making allotments on some of the reservations, and on others the allotments provided for are so small that the Indians, though ready and desiring to settle down, are not willing to accept such small areas when their reservations contain ample lands to afford them homesteads of sufficient size to meet their present and future needs. These inequalities of existing special laws and treaties should be corrected, and some general legislation on the subject should be provided, so that the more progressive members of the different tribes may be settled upon homesteads, and by this example lead others to follow, breaking away from tribal customs and substituting therefor the laws of home, the interest of the family and the rule of the State. The Indian character and nature are such that they are not easily led while brooding over unjust wrongs. It is especially so regarding their lands. Matters arising from the construction and operation of railroads across some of the reservations and claims of title and right of occupancy set up by white persons to some of the best lands within other reservations require legislation for their final adjustment. The settlement of these matters will remove many embarrassments to progress in the work of leading the Indians to the adoption of our institutions and bringing them under the operation, the influence and the protection of the universal laws of our country. The recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, looking to the better protection of and of the public surveys. The preservation of national forests, the adjudication of grants to States and corporations, and of private land claims, and the increased efficiency of the public land service, are commended to the attention of Congress. To secure the widest distribution of public lands in limited quantities among settlers of residence and cultivation, and thus make the greatest number of individual homes, was the primary object of the public land legislation in the early days of the Republic.

This system was a simple one. It commenced with an admirable scheme of public surveys, by which the humblest citizen could identify the tract upon which he wished to establish his home. The price of land was placed within the reach of all the enterprising, industrious and honest pioneer citizens of the country. It was soon, however, found that the object of the laws was perverted under the system of cash sales from a distribution of land among the people to an accumulation of land capital by wealthy and speculative persons. To check this tendency a preference right of purchase was given to settlers on the land, a plan which culminated in the general pre-emption act of 1841.

I recommend the repeal of the pre-emption and timber culture acts, and that the homestead laws be so amended as to better secure compliance with their requirements of residence, improvement and cultivation for the period of five years from date of entry, without commutation or provision for speculative relinquishment. I also recommend the repeal of the desert land laws, unless it shall be the pleasure of the Congress to so amend these laws as to render them less liable to abuses. As the chief motive for an evasion of the laws, and the principal cause of their result in land accumulation instead of land distribution, is the facility with which transfers are made of the right intended to be secured to settlers, it may be deemed advisable to provide by legislation some guards and checks upon the alienation of homestead rights and lands covered thereby until patents issue.

PENSIONS.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions contains a detailed and most satisfactory exhibit of the operations of the Pension Bureau during the last fiscal year.

The amount of work done was the largest in any year since the organization of the bureau, and it has been done at less cost than during the previous year in every division. On the 30th day of June, 1886, there were 365,783 pensioners on the rolls of the bureau. Since 1861 there have been 1,018,735 applications for pensions filed, of which 78,834 were based upon services in the war of 1812. There were 621,754 of these applications allowed, including 60,178 to the soldiers of 1812 and their widows.

The total amount paid for pensions since 1861 is $808,624,811.57. The number of new pensions allowed during the year ended June 30, 1886, is 40,857, a larger number than has been allowed in any year save one since 1861; the names of 2,229 pensioners which had been previously dropped from the rolls were restored during the year, and after deducting those dropped within the same time for various causes, a net increase remains for the year of 20,658 names. From January 1, 1861, to December 1, 1885, 1,967 private pension acts had been passed. Since the last named date, and during the last session of the Congress, 644 such acts became laws.

It seems to me that no one can examine our pension establishment and its operations without being convinced that through its instrumentality justice can be very nearly done to all who are entitled under present laws to the pension bounty of the Government.

But it is undeniable that cases exist, well entitled to relief, in which the Pension Bureau is powerless to relieve. The really worthy cases of this class are such as only lack by misfortune the kind of quantity of proof which the law and regulations of the Bureau require, or which, though their merit is apparent, for some other reason can not be justly dealt with through general laws.

These conditions fully justify application to the Congress and special enactments. But resort to the Congress for a special pension act to overrule the deliberate and careful determination of the Pension Bureau on the merits, or to secure favorable action when it could not be expected under the most liberal execution of general laws, it must be admitted, opens the door to the allowance of questionable claims, and presents to the legislative and executive branches of the Government applications concededly not within the law, and plainly devoid of merit, but so surrounded by sentiment and patriotic feeling that they are hard to resist.

I suppose it will not be denied that many claims for pension are made without merit, and that many have been allowed upon fraudulent representations. This has been declared from the Pension Bureau not only in this but in prior administrations. The usefulness and the justice of any system for the distribution of pensions depend upon the equality and uniformity of its operation. It will be seen from the report of the Commissioner that there are now paid by the Government 131 different rates of pension.

Estimates from the best information we can obtain show that 9,000 of those who have served in the army and navy of the United States are now supported, in whole or in part, from public funds or by organized charities, exclusive of those in Soldiers' Homes under the direction and control of the Government. Only thirteen per cent. of these are pensioners, while of the entire number of men furnished for the late war something like twenty per cent., including their widows and relatives, have been or now are in receipt of pensions. The American people with a patriotic grateful regard for our ex-soldiers too broad and too sacred to be monopolized by any special advocates, are not only willing but anxious that equal and exact justice should be done to all honest claimants for pensions.

Every patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune. We are all tempted by the contemplation of such a condition to supply relief and are often impatient of the limitations of public duty. Yielding to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration I can not rid myself of the conviction that if these ex-soldiers are to be relieved, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of an enactment, under which relief may be claimed as a right, and that such relief should be granted under the sanction of law, not in evasion of it; nor should such worthy objects of care, all equally entitled, be remitted to the unequal operation of sympathy or the tender mercies of social and political influence, with their unjust discriminations.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

On the 1st of March, 1885, the current business of the Patent Office was on an average, five and a half months in arrear, and at the close of the last fiscal year such current work was but three months in arrear, and it is asserted and believed that in the next few months the delay in obtaining an examination of an application for a patent will be but nominal. The number of applications for patents during the last fiscal year, including reissues, designs, trademarks and labels, equals 40,678, which is considerably in excess of the number received during any preceding year. The receipts of the Patent Office during the year aggregated $1,205,167.80, enabling the office to turn into the Treasury a surplus revenue over and above all expenditures of about $163,710.30.

The number of patents granted during the last fiscal year, including reissues, trademarks, designs and labels, was 25,619, a number also quite largely in excess of that of any preceding year. The report of the Commissioner shows the office to be in a prosperous condition and constantly increasing in its business. No increase of force is asked for. The amount estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, was $890,760. The amount estimated for the year ending June 30, 1887, was $853,960.

The amount estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, is $919,160.

to the Government. His suggestion has the unanimous endorsement of the persons selected by the Government to act as directors of these roads, and protect the interests of the United States in the Board of Directors. In considering the plan proposed the sole matters which should be taken into account, in my opinion, are the situation of the Government as a creditor, and the surest way to secure the payment of the principle and interest of its debt. By a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States it has been adjudged that the laws of the several States are inoperative to regulate rates of transportation upon railroads, if such regulation interferes with the rate of carriage from one State into another. This important field of control and regulation having been thus left entirely unoccupied, the expediency of Federal action upon the subject is worthy of consideration.

The relations of

and of laboring men to their employers, are of the utmost concern to every patriotic citizen. When these are strained and distorted unjustifiable claims are apt to be insisted upon by both, and in the controversy which results the welfare of all and the prosperity of the country are jeopardized. Any intervention of the general Government, within the limits of its constitutional authority, to avert such a condition should be willingly accorded. In a special message transmitted to the Congress at its last session I suggested the enlargement of our present Labor Bureau and adding to its present functions the power of arbitration in cases where differences arise between employer and employed. When these differences reach such a stage as to result in the interruption of commerce between the States, the application of this remedy by the General Government might be regarded as entirely within its constitutional powers. But after all has been done by the passage of laws, either Federal or State, to relieve a situation full of solicitude, much more remains to be accomplished by the reinstatement and cultivation of a true American sentiment which recognizes the equality of American citizenship. This, in the light of our traditions and in loyalty to the spirits of our institutions, would teach that a hearty co-operation on the part of all interests is the surest path to national greatness and the happiness of all our people; that capital should, in recognition of the brotherhood of our citizenship, and in a spirit of American fairness, generously accord to labor its just compensation and consideration, and that contented labor is capital's best protection and faithful ally. It would teach, too, that the diverse situations of our people are inseparable from our civilization; that every citizen should, in his sphere, be a contributor to the general good; that capital does not necessarily tend to the oppression of labor, and that violent disturbances and disorders alienate from their promoters true American sympathy and kindly feelings.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, representing the oldest and largest of our national industries, is subserving well the purposes of its organization. The interests of millions of our citizens engaged in agriculture are involved in an enlargement and improvement of the results of their labor, and a zealous regard for their welfare should be a willing tribute to those whose productive returns are a main source of our progress and power.

The existence of pleuro pneumonia among the cattle of various States has led to burdensome and in some cases disastrous restrictions in an important branch of our commerce, threatening to affect the quantity and quality of our food supply. This is a matter of such importance and of such far-reaching consequences that I hope it will engage the serious attention of the Congress to the end that such a remedy may be applied as the limits of a constitutional delegation of power to the general Government will permit. I commend to the consideration of the Congress the report of the Commissioner, and his suggestions concerning the interest intrusted to his care.

has added to the most convincing proofs of its necessity and usefulness. It is a fact worthy of note that every public officer who has a just idea of his duty to the people testifies to the value of his reform. Its staunchest friends are found among those who understand it best and its warmest supporters are those who are restrained and protected by its requirements.

The meaning of such restraint and protection is not appreciated by those who want places under the Government, regardless of merit and efficiency, nor by those who insist that the selection of such places should rest upon a proper credential showing active partisan work. They mean to public officers, if not their lives, the only opportunity afforded them to attend to public business, and they mean to the good people of the country the better performance of the work of their Government. It is exceedingly strange that the scope and nature of this reform are so little understood, and that so many things not embraced within its plan are called by its name. When cavil yields more fully to examination the system will bring larger additions to the number of its friends. Our civil service reform may be imperfect in some of its details; it may be misunderstood and opposed; it may not always be faithfully applied; its designs may sometimes miscarry through mistake or willful intent; it may sometimes tremble under the assaults of its enemies or languish under the misguided zeal of impracticable friends, but if the people of the country ever submit to the banishment of its underlying principle from their Government, they will abandon the sweetest guarantee of the safety and success of American institutions.

I invoke for this reform the cheerful and ungrudging support of the Congress. I renew my recommendation made last year that the Commissioners be made equal to other officers of the Government having like duties and responsibilities, and I hope that such reasonable appropriations may be made as will enable them to increase the usefulness of the cause they have in charge.

The control of the affairs of the

having been placed in the hands of purely executive officers, while the Congress still retains all legislative authority relating to its government, it becomes my duty to make known the most pressing needs of the District and recommend their consideration. The laws of the District appear to be in an uncertain and unsatisfactory condition, and their codification or revision is much needed. During the past year one of the bridges leading from the District to the State of Virginia became unfit for use and travel upon it was forbidden. This leads me to suggest that the improvement of all the bridges crossing the Potomac and its branches from the City of Washington, is worthy of the attention of Congress. The Commissioners of the District represent that the laws regulating the sale of liquor and granting licenses therefor should be at once amended, and that legislation is needed to consolidate, define and enlarge the scope and powers of charitable and penal institutions within the District. I suggest that the Commissioners be clothed with the power to make, within fixed limitations, police regulations. I believe this power granted and carefully guarded would tend to subserve the good order of the municipality. It seems that trouble still exists growing out of the occupation of the streets and avenues by certain railroads having their termini in the city. It is very important that such laws should be enacted upon this subject as will secure to the railroads all the facilities they require for the transaction of their business, and at the same time protect citizens from injury to their persons or property. The Commissioners again complain that the accommodations afforded them for the necessary offices for District business and for the safe keeping of valuable books and papers are entirely insufficient. I recommend that this condition of affairs be remedied by Congress and that suitable quarters be furnished for the needs of the District Government.

IN CONCLUSION,

I earnestly invoke such wise action on the part of the people's legislators as will subserve the public good and demonstrate during the remaining days of the Congress as at present organized its ability and inclination to so meet the people's needs that it shall be gratefully remembered by an expectant constituency.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

GREAT SNOW-STORM.

The South Reports the Heaviest Ever Experienced.

Four Feet Deep in Tennessee—Buildings Crushed at Asheville, N. C., and Chattanooga.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Dec. 6.—Snow has fallen to the depth of sixteen inches, and is still falling. Traffic and travel of all kinds is suspended. The weight of the snow crushed in the roof of the Asheville Tobacco Works, and a large stock of smoking tobacco was ruined. The loss is heavy. The old Shelton factory with a large stock of tobacco stored in it, was crushed to the ground; also the wholesale provision house of Dickson & Watson.

WINCHESTER, VA., Dec. 6.—The eight inches of snow which fell Saturday and yesterday have been followed by another fall to-day. Many farmers have much corn out. Indications to-night are for heavy drifts. A biting wind is blowing from the northwest. Winter has commenced in this locality much earlier than usual. Ice several inches thick has been gathered.

HARRISONBURG, VA., Dec. 6.—The most remarkable snow-storm experienced for years is now prevailing here. It has been falling continually for sixty hours. The snow is now ten to fifteen inches deep. The thermometer is rising, with some prospects of rain.

RICHMOND, VA., Dec. 6.—Almost continuous snow, hail and rain since Saturday morning have made the present storm one of the severest experienced for years. The appearances are favorable for several inches more of snow.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Dec. 6.—The heaviest snowstorm ever experienced is prevailing. Roads are impassable. The storm, combined with the sleet of yesterday, has done immense damage to forest and shade trees.

KNOXVILLE, Dec. 6.—Snow here is the heaviest ever known. It is over two feet deep; thirty-six inches at Greenville, and forty-eight inches at Bristol, on the State line. Business is practically suspended. Trains are running, but with difficulty.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Dec. 6.—A terrible accident occurred at Dayton last night in the stock-house of the Dayton Coal and Iron Company. The snow, which had fallen to a depth of eleven inches, drifted on the roof of the house, a building two hundred feet square, until it could no longer resist the weight, and fell with a crash. Foreman Kerner and five workmen were in the building when the roof gave way. They had no warning and were not apprised of their danger until the rafters began to break away from the center-pole, and they were crushed to the earth. The men were all at work packing stock. In an hour the injured men were all recovered. Their arms and legs were broken, and they sustained other injuries that may prove fatal.

DANGER IN CELLULOID.

Lively Experience in a Cincinnati Newspaper Establishment.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 6.—A somewhat strange accident occurred at the A. N. Kellogg Newspaper Company establishment Saturday evening, more laughable than serious, but which should prove a warning to others from like cases. A newspaper form had been delivered to them for press work. The day being very cold, the form was set near one of the stoves while waiting for the press. Suddenly a blaze of light burst from it, and before the men could discover the cause, the faces of several of the celluloid cuts that were locked up in the forms, were consumed, so inflammable was the material. These cuts, owing to their extreme lightness, are coming into general use, as they can be cheaply mailed to any point. Celluloid, when brought near a fire, is almost as dangerous as gunpowder, and great care should be used in handling it. It was only a few days ago at Chicago a celluloid comb, in a child's hair, came in contact with a gas jet, and it was only by prompt action upon the part of the mother that the child escaped serious injury.

After the reading of the message, the House adjourned on the announcement of the death of Messrs. Beach and Arnot.

U. S. Supreme Court Decisions.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The U. S. Supreme Court has decided in favor of the Circuit Court and the Louisiana Lottery Company in a case recently brought by the city of New Orleans to assess its capital stock. It has also decided that a person brought to this country under an extradition treaty can only be tried for the one offense with which he is charged until a reasonable time has been given for his return to the country whence he had been taken.

Is It Another Charley Ross Case?

READING, PA., Dec. 6.—Willie Arnold, a very bright lad of twelve years, disappeared from his home in this city on last Wednesday morning, since which time no trace of him has been found. The lost boy is the son of Wm. A. Arnold, reputed to be the richest man in this city. Detectives have been at work on the case, but as yet no clew has been obtained.

Chicago Recognizes the Labor Party.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—In conformity with a request from the Executive Committee of the United Labor party, that their organization be recognized, Luke Coyne, a member of that party, was to-day appointed by County Judge Prendergast as one of the three election commissioners, under the reform city election law.

Lost With All on Board.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Dec. 6.—The schooner Edith, from St. Pierre for Langleid, was lost Sunday on a reef near Miquelon Island. All the crew, numbering thirteen, perished. The vessel was loaded with provisions for the winter supply of Miquelon.

Mr. Stone's Successor.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The President has appointed Geo. A. Allen to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania, vice W. A. Stone, suspended for offensive partisanship.

—A few of the finer class retail shoe stores are selling a balmoral shoe for ladies' wear that is made precisely like a man's balmoral, except that it is higher cut. The heel, sole, vamp, quarter, stitching and fitting are identical with the same features of a fine shoe for gentlemen's wear. It looks sensible, will be very comfortable, and must be much more healthful for street wear.—Boot and Shoe Recorder.

—I. C. Gorsuch caught a lot of eels in fishpots in the Susquehanna, put them in a barrel, and started to carry them up the bank. The bottom of the barrel fell out; and, despite Mr. Gorsuch's best efforts, every eel wriggled back into the river, and he now knows what they mean by the saying "as slippery as an eel."—*N. Y. THE NINE HOURS DAY.

The Cabinet Makers' Union to Demand It on the 1st of January.

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 5.—At a joint meeting of the Cabinet-makers' and Carpenters' Unions this afternoon Henry Emmerich, of New York, General Secretary of the International Cabinet-makers' Union, delivered an address urging the men to stand by their organization. He said that on January 1 a demand will be made throughout the United States for the adoption of nine hours as the length of a day's work. Employers will be given two months to decide, and the system will go into operation on April 1. If it does not [illegible] should be strong, so that a general strike can be recognized. Mr. Emmerich said all other trades unions are expected to follow in the demand.

PHILADELPHIA FENIANS.

Organize a New Society, and Appoint a Committee to Carry Out Rossa's Schemes.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—The Record tomorrow will publish a sensational story of the actions and plans of a new Fenian society. The article says that the society was formed by dissatisfied members of the older organizations, who met here Thanksgiving Day and chose O'Donovan Rossa their chief. They intend to intrigue toward creating discontent in Canada toward the mother country that will eventually break out into open rebellion. After thus crippling the hated enemy they are to transfer the base of operation to Australia. A secret committee of five, to execute Rossa's schemes, will be appointed. Contributions from the faithful, to assist in the consummation of these plans, will be solicited.

A Young Hero at the Wheel.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—No story of suffering among sailors in the recent blast which swept the lakes will excite more pity than that of a sailor lad named Johnson, who now lies dying at New Buffalo, Mich. He manfully stood at the wheel of the schooner Saud, up to his waist in the ice-cold waters of the lake all the time, and half drowned by every wave that struck the vessel, while the services of the Captain and able-bodied members of the crew were required elsewhere. All save one were disabled, and to this one the boy was finally compelled to beg for relief. His prayer was granted, and not any too soon, for in a short time more he would have been frozen stiff at the wheel.

A War Question Settled.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The life of General Lee just issued, which contains much interesting and valuable material which is entirely new, settles the question of the numbers of paroles issued at the time of the surrender. There have been claims on the Confederate side at various times that the force surrendered was very small, some having placed it as low as eight thousand. The parole-rolls produced in the book show that the total paroles were 28,231, divided as follows: General headquarters, 284; infantry, 22,349; cavalry, 1,559; artillery, 2,576; miscellaneous troops, 1,466.

Snow-Storm at Mobile.

MOBILE, ALA., Dec. 5.—Mobilians were surprised on awakening this morning to find snow falling briskly. There were frequent flurries until three o'clock, when the snow began falling heavily. It continued for three hours, covering the ground to the depth of three-quarters of an inch. The two previous snows remembered here were in 1846 and 1880, both more important than this one. Being Sunday, the populace did as on previous occasions, but considerable snow-balling was indulged in by the young folks, many of whom never before handled this product of the elements.

De Freycinet's Great Coup.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—The resignation of the Ministry is regarded as a great coup on the part of De Freycinet. The opposition overreached themselves, and are facing practical impossibilities. Some of their eminent leaders have implored De Freycinet to run for office. He is regarded now as the most popular man before the people in France, and a probable successor to President Grevy.

Sunday Observance Enforced.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.—The general order issued by Superintendent Murray instructing police captains to see that the Sunday law was observed, was generally enforced to-day. A few obstinate store-keepers on the East Side refused to comply with the law and were arrested, being admitted to bail shortly after. The usual number of violators of the excise law were taken into custody.

A Natural Gas Explosion.

WASHINGTON, PA., Dec. 5.—A natural gas tank exploded at Hickory, Pa., this morning, instantly killing Albert Crocker, a workman.

[illegible] Congress is in session.

The California Legislature is Democratic by 16 majority on joint ballot.

The aspirants for the legislative honors in Boone county are too few ntention as yet Who are they yhow?

A Washington correspondent culates that the Government ys out an average of $7,000 every ur in pensions.

The fourteenth annual session of Kentucky State Grange will et at the A. and M. College, Lexngton, Ky., December 14th.

When the prison doors at Willnstown came open, the prisoners, t like those of old, look to their els before the jailer had time to come alarmed.

An editor, who claims to know, sures his readers that "Education something like love. Most men nk they have got it till they ne to be about 40 years old."

The new assessment law is bring- g the rich to time, who heretofore aped just taxation. One man in vensboro is now assessed $15,000 o before got off on $1,000 assessvaluation.

The Chinese code of morality es not say "Wives obey your husads," but "Wives, respect your sbands." This it will be seen, is y much more difficult of comance than the first version.

The November election strengthd the spinal column of the Indi- a Republicans, and they are now ganizing for the 1888 contest, ich campaign may now be conered in progress in that State.

If a high protective tariff is such blessing to the laboring man, y is it that strikes for increased ges in this country are so comon, and greatly interfere with se industries that are especially tected?

One of two things is certain: The t Legislature made a tremendous of work for the Public Printer, he is a very slow coach. It has en eleven months since the Legisure met, and the laws it passed ve not yet been sent out by the blic Printer.

The entire McFerran horse stock Jefferson county for the year 36, was assessed for taxation $10,- 0, and yet the thoroughbred ck of that collection, excluding common stock, sold at public ction in the summer, for cash or equivalent, at $342,000.

The Louisville Commercial says re is good authority for saying at a Republican weekly newspar is to be established in that city th a capital stock of $15,000, and at two or three of the best known publicans in the State, long in itorial harness, will have charge it.

A new prophet has arisen in Hart nty, Ga. He predicts that the rld will end in 1890, and has sold his earthly posessions with a view a timely settling upon his own count. He claims to be the spirit Elijah incarnate, but that notion ll hardly keep him out of an ylum.—Ex.

The Commercial says: "Agitators Socialism find Louisville a poor ace to work up. They get few ditors at their speeches, and those at go to hear are instigated solely curiosity, and are not influenced the harangues. The sum of $9 s all that Dr. Aveling, who claims be a boss Socialist could draw in his visit here."

Two or three of our subscribers Florence informed us Monday at no Recorders were received at at office last week. How that ald be we can not comprehend. Florence package left this ofs at the usual time, and the fault its nonappearance at Florence at some other point. For the week the mail service generally to have been considerably [illegible]

[illegible] Winefrod, of Alaska, in his [illegible] report to the Secretary of [illegible] comments upon what [illegible] the widespread but erron- [illegible] that Alaska is a region [illegible] winter, and appends a [illegible] summary for this [illegible] that the coldest

In regard to the recent Congressional election the Warsaw Independent says: "Republicans and Democrats alike in this county know that every one who desired to vote was permitted that privilege and the returns are correct [illegible] particular [illegible] ing of the returns to [illegible] any one.

It is [illegible] W Reed & Co. that are contesting Mr Carlisle's election and not Mr Thobe in our opinion Reed has a grievance against Mr Carlisle and is using Mr Thobe as a tool by means of which to fight him. Reed has several silent partners in the contract which he has undertaken, and they will eventually be known. They can't remain under cover for all time.

Unless the workingmen cease pulling against each other they will have little or no chance in the coming city election. For instance in the Eleventh Ward, there are two workingmen out for Council. Thos. Keenan, a molder with the L. & N., is out as a Workingman, and John Caldwell has been endorsed by the Knights of Labor.—Louisville Commercial.

Within the last two weeks several new names have been mentioned in connection with the race for Governor. Among the number is Judge William S. Pryor, of the Court of Appeals. It strikes us that Judge Pryor is the best man that has been yet suggested, and if he should become a candidate he will make a strong race, and, if successful, he will make a good Governor.

Wheat is now grown successfully 1,500 miles north of the boundary of the United States. The new Canadian Pacific Railroad is opening up the finest wheat country in the world, and the older wheat fields of the world will have to be abandoned, and cheap wheat is assured to future generations. And this northern wheat is far superior to the product of the warmer regions.

Indiana has the worst mixture of political results since the Presidential election in 1876, and each party is now nerveously waiting the assembling of the legislature which will over-haul the November election in that State. Democrats and Republicans have nearly equal chances for rascality, but it is generally believed that on the face of the returns that the Democrats have two majority in the Legislature.

The Democratic party of this State stands in need of a candidate for Governor who is abreast of the times—who knows how to concentrate his ability on a policy that will encourage the development of the natural resources of the State, and place her on the highway to prosperity, and last but by no means least, a man whose recommendations as Chief Magistrate of Kentucky will inspire the confidence of the legislature. It is not every man who wants to be Governor that fills the bill by considerable.

Mr. Van B. Young in his history of Bath county, published in the Mt. Sterling Sentinel, shows that the shot used by the American forces in the battle of New Orleans was made in the Bourbon foundry, shipped down the Licking river to the Ohio. The shipment made was 413 twenty-fours and 375 thirty-twos, making altogether 21,812 pounds of metal. This shipment was made December 24th, 1807. Two boatloads were sunk in the Licking river at the mill dam at Ile's and are there yet.

An interesting question relating to the law against counterfeiting is to be settled by the Treasury Department. The Chief of the Secret Service recently seized a small painting about a foot long by eight inches wide. It was an exact representation of a five dollar note painted on a piece of wood. The deception was very clever, and it looked as if the bill had just been pasted on the board. The Chief of the Secret Service was of the opinion that it should be destroyed as a counterfeit, but the owner strongly protested. The matter has been referred to the Solicitor for an opinion. Treasurer Jordon is of the opinion that it is a work of art and should not be considered as a counterfeit.

Senator Harris, of Madison county, is a candidate for Governor. His platform is down with the new Revenue Law, and it will make him votes in some localities; but if his opposition to the Revenue Law is the best support he has for his claim to the highest office in the State he is standing on dangerous grounds. Senator Harris was a member of the State Senate last winter on the floor of which he opposed the passage of the Revenue Law to no effect, and as Governor of the State his opposition to that law will be none the more formidable than last winter. It is not altogether apparent that the Senator does not want to make a little buncumbe of his opposition to that particular law.

The Plaindealer, a Democratic paper at Hawesville, this State, thus laments the election of Dr. Hunter, Republican, to Congress from the third district:

The Democratic sun is down
The "Rads" are now on top;
Boss Hunter did the thing up brown
Caught every "coon, sure pop."
So, let us trot the horses out,
And hitch the hearse up well,
And have a great big funeral—
The party's gone to h—ll.

We acknowledge that Simon Bolivar Buckner has the inside track in the Gubernatorial contest at present, but only hope the progressive young Democracy will rise up and knock his boom into smithereens. If Buckner is the best that the Kentucky Democracy can do we think it high time that Gabriel was looking around for his trumpet.—Catlettsburg Leader.

Various names have been mentioned by the press of Kentucky for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, etc. We know of no one better fitted to fill the position of Lieutenant-Governor than Hon. Lucius Desha, of Cynthiana. He is not only capable but honest and we believe would make the State a faithful officer. What say you, brother members of the press.—Falmouth Guide.

Hon. John G. Carlisle's seat in the Fiftieth Congress is to be contested by Geo. H. Thobe, the Workingmen's candidate for Congress in this district at the last election. One of the allegations made by Thobe is that "in Grant county the election officers were all Democrats." We do not know how it was at other places, but in this town two of the officers are Republicans, one a Democrat and the other a Prohibitionist.—Corinth Enterprise.

Turkey buyers have been busy during the past week, and have about gathered the crop. Joseph Rodgers bought 1,000 in the Payn's neighborhood Friday, and a number near this place Monday. Monday night the prisoners confined in the Williamstown jail made their escape. The doors of the jail were found wide open Tuesday morning. There were three prisoners confined therein. Sam Anderson for murder, Owen Sleet for rape, and Charles Hedrick, colored, for petit larceny. It is a mystery how they succeeded in opening the doors. Some think the impression of the locks were made by their friends and had keys made. Of course the doors were opened with keys, but what keys and how procured is the question. Mr. Layle the jailer, says the keys were placed under a table in his house and found them there on Tuesday morning undisturbed.—Courier.

Mr. Albert Corbin, who fell in an ice-house and broke his thigh last fall, is having quite a serious time. He has been greatly troubled with rheumatism for several weeks.

The case of Eliza Gorman against Richard Madden, and Sam Hind vs. L. F. Pursifull, &c., will go to the Court of Appeals. The record in the first named has been made out.

Last Saturday Piper Bros. opened up their holiday attractions, for which there was a demand instanter. Read their advertisement in this impression and then go and see for yourself.

Bessie G., Grant & Norris' trotting mare died on Monday night of last week at Petersburg. She had a record considerably below twenty, consequently was a valuable piece of horse flesh.

The Assessor has about completed the first assessment of the county under the new revenue law. He has till the 15th of this month to have his book completed and delivered to the County Clerk.

Master Harry Fisk's handsome turnout, a poney and a new set of harness and a dog-cart, is admired by every one who sees it. You could not induce Harry to miss a day at school now, we imagine.

The scarcity of coal at Petersburg was a very great inconvenience to many of the citizens of that town previous to the arrival of a supply about the middle of last week. Many persons had to fall back on wood.

The last proposition of the Methodist regarding the acquiring of a church building at this place is, having purchased the old Methodist church building, to raize that structure and erect a new building on the site of the old one.

That fellow who jumped from the Cincinnati suspension bridge into the river last Saturday about dark, was certainly in a condition to enjoy a fire for a short time if he chanced to go to the world where heat is made a specialty.

The Methodist have bought the old church—will tear it down and rebuild, making the new church six feet longer and four feet higher, with a recess at the rear and a toll tower in front. The estimated cost is three thousand dollars.

Stephen E. Seward died at his home in Rising Sun, Sunday morning, November 21st, of Addison's disease. This was only the third known case of the kind in the world, and attracted a great deal of attention from the medical profession.—Recorder.

Dills & Crisler have put up a long string of their patent fence on McClure's farm near town, which improves the looks of the farm very much. They now have on hand 21,000 poplar slats to weave into fencing, which makes a fence good enough for anyone.

Rev. [illegible], of Petersburg, who is a close observer of the changes of the temperature, says that the mercury was lower on the first three days of this month than it has been here on the same three days for twenty-eight years. On the first it was [illegible], on the second and third [illegible] above zero.

It is now reported that the opposition to the [illegible] is such that the Ford route will have to be abandoned and the road, if built at all, will go [illegible] the table land, where the people will very likely give the right of way, and aid the road in every way.—Rising Sun Recorder.

Just as we were closing our columns for this issue the mail brought in an "ad" from Hyde & Bro., of Rising Sun, announcing the closing out of a thirty-five thousand dollar stock of goods at figures that are astonishingly low. Our Boone county people will find it greatly to their interest to call on that firm when in Rising Sun.

Monday a friend requested us to ascertain and publish the number of persons that have united with the various churches in the county since last August, and for that purpose we would be glad if some member of each church in the county would send us a postal card stating the number of additions to his or her church since that date. Don't neglect this, will you?

The Christmas Holidays will be opened by a Cantata of about forty voices Christmas Eve., at Burlington, in which a Christmas Tree will be celebrated. The tree is for the benefit of everybody, and those who have presents to give will have them cared for by trusty persons. Decide on the present now you wish to give to your father, mother, sister, brother, friend or sweetheart and put it on the tree for them.

Messrs. Clinton Gaines and W. O. Kirtley, of the Bullittsville country, who went to Arkansas the 2nd of last month, on a hunting expedition, returned home last Friday. They report a big time and lots of fun. Billy killed two deer while Clinton slew a bear. The bear's hide they brought home with them and it is immense. While in town Monday, Mr. Gaines showed us a large piece of flat lead which they found imbedded in the bear's carcass, supposed to have been a bullet.

The Lexington Observer says the goose bone indicates that December will open clear and bright enough, but the promising of its coming will soon be dispelled. About the third of the month will come falling weather, with rain or snow, and it will be exceedingly disagreeable, with every variety of "nasty weather," until about the 18th, when there will follow a few pleasant days. The Christmas holidays will be cold, with most probably snow. The general character of the weather for the month will be falling, and not much will be seen of the sun. The average temperature will be lower than usual.

Permit me to say through your columns to the people of Boone county that the reports put in circulation in Boone county by Andrew Grosser, are utterly false, untrue in every particular and contemptably malicious. I challenge him to prove a single statement he has made against me, and would refer a fair minded public to the leading citizens of Lawrenceburg for reference to my conduct, character and standing in the community where, as a member of the Christian church, I am striving to follow the teachings of our blessed Lord and Master. JOHN BARNES, Lawrenceburg, Ind.

On last Friday night David Alcorn, a young man from Boone county who is staying with his sister Mrs. Joe Minor, was returning home, and when between Trimnell' hardware store and J. W. Montgomery's residence he says he saw some man in the middle of the street, who commenced cursing him and finally threw a rock at him. Alcorn attempted to draw his pistol but it caught in his pocket and fired, the ball penetrating the skin and passing under the skin about eight inches. Drs. Rinehart and Robinson cut the ball out next day. He is suffering some from the wound but is improving. His mother and sister were telegraphed for and are now with him.—Corinth Enterprise.

A few days since William Ryle and family, who reside down on Gunpowder, went away from home to remain over night. After they had gone one of the sons went home and made a fire by which to warm. Having warmed he covered up the fire and left home and also remained over night. When Mr. Ryle and family arrived at home the next afternoon they found in their absence a large portion of the carpeting on the floor was burned off and a hole about six feet square burned in the floor, even the sleepers being burnt in two. The fire had gone out, having been smothered by the smoke which could find no escape, thereby saving the residence and contents. The fire was communicated from the grate by some means.

As Owen Stephens, son of John Stephens, of Bullittsville, was going home from school at Morgan Academy last Wednesday evening, his horse fell with him when crossing Woolper creek about a mile from town, and broke his collar bone. C. G. Smith, who was taking his sister home from the same school, was some distance ahead of Owen, but chanced to hear him halloo, and returned to find him lying in a fence corner which he had succeeded in reaching in considerable pain. Clint took Owen home with him, and at his earnest solicitation he took him on home in a buggy. Dr J. M. Grant was called and adjusted the broken bone, and at last accounts he was getting along nicely, the only thing that troubled him being his forced absence from school.

A few friends were invited to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Riley [illegible] to witness the marriage of their [illegible] daughter, Miss Lizzie to Mr. W. [illegible], of Burlington, Boone county. Promptly at [illegible] the bridal party entered the parlor Thursday evening, Nov. 25, 1886, and with a few solemn and impressive words spoken by Rev. [illegible], they were made one. The bride looked lovely in a [illegible] and [illegible] with a bouquet of white [illegible]. The groom wore a suit of black and looked very proud of the prize he had won. After congratulations the party entered a carriage and were driven to [illegible] mouth, where they boarded the train for Cincinnati, and will remain a few days then go westward, to Texas, their future home. That success may attend them in all their undertakings, is the wish of an eye witness.—[illegible].

The Boone County Teachers' Association meets at the Beaver school house the 3d Saturday in Dec. at 10 o'clock a. m. promptly, with the following programme:

This is the season of the year when the young converts at the late revivals get mesmerized at the country dances, and forget their religion.

It is said that a young gent in the neighborhood of Burlington will lead to the altar, one of Plattsburg's fair daughters about New Years.

Bessie G., Norris & Grant's trotting mare, snugged herself the other day and died from her injuries. They have bad luck with their trotting stock.

We hear the names of J Frank Grant, of Petersburg, and Robt. Hughes, of Beaver Lick, spoken of in connection with the next Legislative race in this county. They are two good ones.

Miss Susie Lyons, daughter of G. H. Lyons, of Pesersburg, died last Wednesday of consumption. She is the third daughter that has died of this dreadful disease in the last few years.

Dr. J. M. Grant was in town last Saturday morning. How is business in your line doctor? "Its distressingly healthy." So the doctor can play checkors these long winter evenings and not be disturbed.

A young fellow by the name of Petty, who has been living with Chas. and John Finn for sometime, last Wednesday in the absence of Chas. and Jack, he packed up John's Sunday clothes, worth $15, a brand new pair of custom made boots, a razor, pair of scissors and other small articles, and left for more congenial climes. He was traced as far as Lawrenceburg. It is supposed he went West. This is not the first time he has been guilty of the like, and if he don't watch he will break into the penitentiary.

A debating society has been organized at Ashbyfork school house with A. A. Maxfield as chairman. The question as argued last Friday night was, "affirmed that the manufacture of spirituous liquors should be prohibited in the United States." Dick Gore and C. L. Hensley affirmed, A. Maxfield and John Stith (Dan Vorhees) denied. The judges decided in favor of more liquor. The question for next meeting is "affirmed that the labor strikes are [illegible]." Several orators from [illegible] are expected and some good speeches will be made. Hon. N. S. Walton and J. Frank Grant have been invited and are expected to attend and discuss this most important question.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.
Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed. THOS. H. HANDY, M. D.

A COLLEGE ROMANCE.

A Story of Love and Constitutional History.

I.

The lecture was just over. We four girls, the lectured, were standing, notebooks in hand, in a little group in the corridor, talking in subdued tones, consulting one another on a knotty point in the history of grand jury. The lecturer came out of the lecture-room and passed us. He bowed gravely as he passed, and went hastily down the stairs, his college cap in his hand, his long gown falling limply about his tall, thin figure. We were silent until he was out of sight: then our tongues were loosened, and we no longer spoke in subdued tones.

"Poor young man," said Lottie, feelingly.

"He is grave as a judge," said Nell.

"That," said Claudia, weightily, "is nervousness. He is nervous, girls—nervous of us."

But it was I who had most to say. I leant against the balusters, with my face towards the open door of the lecture-room, and gave the girls the benefit of all my observations.

"Yes, he is nervous," I said. "Poor young man, he is shy! When I asked him if the grand jury still existed he blushed, girls—oh, he is copper-colored to start with, I know, but he blushed through the copper-color——"

"For your ignorance, perhaps," suggested Claudia.

"He is very shy," said I. "He is not used, I expect, to teaching girls. He can not forget that we are girls. He waited—did you notice?—until we had left the room; the other lecturers stalk out before us. I think he wanted to open the door and to bow us out. Oh, poor young man, he is shy! shy and young——"

The girls were frowning at me. Claudia was touching my elbow, with mysterious meaning, on one side; Nell pulling my sleeve imperatively on the other. Lottie formed her lips into a silent "hush."

"Shy and young—very young—what is the matter?" I said.

Nobody answered me. No answer, indeed, was needed. At that moment our lecturer passed us again, and went back into the lecture-room. He had come up the stairs behind me—he must have heard me. He seemed to glance my way as he passed. There seemed to be a twinkle in his gray-blue eyes. The girls moved slowly away, but I turned precipitately and fled.

Past the lecture-room door, along the corridor, up-stairs I fled, to my own little room (study, bed-chamber and reception-room) near the sky. I meant to work and took my Stubbs and turned over its leaves, and found my place hurriedly, with an unusual energy. But work would not drive away the remembrance of my unlucky speeches; the sentences bore no meaning to me; I could not fix my attention on the history of early Germanic institutions. I shut up my Stubbs in despair; the girls were playing tennis in the courts below; I seized my racket and ran swiftly down to join them. Tennis would make me forget.

But if my thoughts were distracted for an hour or two they attacked me again when the game was over. I stood before my glass and changed my dress for dinner and grew rosy red as the remembrance of my words came back. I had said that he had blushed because I spoke to him—I had said that he was shy—I had implied that he was shy of me because I was a girl. I should never dare to speak to him or look at him again. I had called him copper-colored—at least I might have spared him that reproach. I looked in the glass at my own little face; it was brown as a berry—brown by nature in the first place and made more brown by the summer sun and the breeze from the sea at home. His eyes were blue and his hair was fair. I was altogether brown—hair, eyes, skin, all brown alike. And I called him copper-colored!—I had called him young!—what else had I called him? I brushed back my brown hair tightly and severely, tied my soft silk sash with a jerk and ran down to dinner with a rush, hoping to escape from my thoughts again. The girls were as happy as usual. They could contemplate the situation tranquilly; it even afforded them amusement; they found something humorous in my discomfiture. It was I, not they, whom he had overheard.

We sat in a half circle on the floor before the fire that night, in our pretty bright dressing-gowns, and drank cocoa and ate sweet biscuits before going to bed. I was hostess. My guests were merry, but I to-night was unusually silent and depressed.

"After all," said Claudia, sensibly, trying to comfort me—"after all, what did you say, Cis? Nothing—nothing at all events that mattered. You said he was young; well, that is true. How old, girls, do you imagine he is?"

"Twenty-five," said Lottie.

"Twenty-four," said Nell.

"Very young," said Claudia, conclusively.

"Then you called him shy—well, he is shy. You said he blushed—well, he does blush."

"That is just it," I groaned. "It is all so true."

"He will think you observant," said Nelly, nibbling the sugar from her biscuit with slow epicurean enjoyment.

"He will think, at all events, that you are interested in him," said Lottie, cheerfully.

"In him—a man!" I groaned, for a girl who has tyrannized over eight admiring brothers and been treated all her life with deference by fond father and uncles has an ungrateful scorn for men. I had had no meek mother and aunts and sisters to teach me humility as a becoming womanly virtue.

"Poor Cis—poor Cicely!" said the [illegible]ically. "And Saturday [illegible] you will be forced to [illegible] poor Cicely!" [illegible] coming. On [illegible] Friday

I went about with a constant consciousness of Saturday's inevitable advent. Our lecturer had stated that on Saturday afternoon he would be pleased to go through our papers with us to discuss points of interest, explain difficulties, and remove possible misconceptions. We were to go to him singly. I was to go alone to the man whom I had said was shy of me and thought of me as a girl and could not forget that I was a girl, whom I had called copper-colored, who I had said blushed—the thought was terrible.

Saturday came. The girls were cheerful. "You first, Cis," they said. "Go first and get it over."

"Yes, I will go now," I said. But when he came I faltered and put off the evil moment, and Claudia, Nell and Lottie all went in before me.

"He is not shy to-day," reported Nell, on her return. "I think, Cis, that we were mistaken about him. Oh, perhaps, he was under the impression that we were learned girls, after our papers and our chatter he knows us better and thinks very little of us. He is solemn—[illegible]. And no old man could be severer. Oh, he is quite at his ease."

Nell had reported truly. He was quite at his ease. He rose when he heard me, and looked at me calmly enough when he shook hands.

"Miss Chrystal," he said.

"Yes," I said, meekly.

He touched a chair that stood beside his at the table, and I sat down with a feeling of obedience. His face was grave, his manner, as Nell had said, severe. I wondered how I could have thought him nervous. He seated himself beside me, and drew a corrected exercise toward him.

"This, I think, is your paper, Miss Chrystal?"

"Yes," I said, in a small voice—"I—I think so, Mr. Tudor."

He turned the pages slowly and gravely. I sat looking down at my hands folded meekly on the table and did not see his face.

"Your first answer is—is inadequate."

"The first part of Stubbs is—is very difficult," I said, venturing to look up.

There was a strange quick little twinkle for a moment in his eyes as he glanced at me; but his lips did not smile.

"In the next question," he said, slowly; "You confuse—or seem to confuse—two things, the constitutions and the Assize of Clarendon—a slip, perhaps?"

He was looking steadily and calmly at me, waiting. For the first time in my life I felt small and young and meek. I forgot that I was nineteen and no longer a school-girl. I was overwhelmed with a sense of my own ignorance. "No—it was not a slip," I said. "Constitutional history is quite—quite new to me."

"So I had gathered from your paper," he said quietly.

His very gravity and quietness seemed like bitterest satire. He said he did not grasp my theory here—did not follow my argument there. And I had had no theory—I could not follow my own argument. He grew more grave and quiet and slow. At last he pushed back his chair a little and gave me my paper folded.

"You will have to read very steadily, Miss Chrystal."

"Yes," I said, in a small voice.

"For some months."

"Yes," I said again.

"The rest of the class are far ahead of you."

"Yes—yes—I know," I said.

He seemed to have nothing more wholesomely humiliating to say to me, and I understood that the interview might end, and rose to go. He rose, too, immediately. Most of our lecturers nodded at us and sat still. Mr. Tudor conceded something to my girlhood. He stood where I stood, and remained standing as he continued to speak to me. He threw out a crumb of praise.

"Your style is clear," he said. "When you deal with subjects within your grasp—when you do not get out of your depth—your style is clear decidedly. Not an altogether historical style, but lucid."

I felt that, on the whole, his blame had been less humiliating than this his praise. He held open the door for me and shook hands gravely with a quiet smile.

"Good afternoon," he said.

"Good afternoon," I replied, and I fled.

The girls had invaded my study and were lazily stretched on my bed and window-seat and rug waiting for me.

"Well?" they said.

I sat down beside Claudia on the hearthrug and tore my corrected paper into small atoms and burnt them. "I hate him," I said, poking the fire vigorously and pushing the smoldering paper into the flames—"I hate him! He thinks me conceited! He thinks me horrid! He tries to be satirical because he thinks me puffed up. He laughs at me.—I saw it in his eyes—more than once—always—every time I looked at him. I said—I said he blushed—I said he thought of me as a girl—I said he blushed because I spoke to him. And he despises me! And he will never, never forget."

And there I forgot that I belonged to a family of boys where no one ever wept, and burst into sudden tears; and Claudia, Nell and Lottie fell to comforting me.

II.

As the weeks went on I grew more and more convinced that I hated and always should hate Mr. Tudor—that he thought me young, ignorant, stupid, flippant, spoilt and conceited; that he despised my intellect, remembered my foolish speeches and always would remember them. His eyes had a way of twinkling when he looked at me and looked away again; all the perplexing questions seemed to fall to me, and his lips twitched when I spoke of gavelkind as a custom duty, and found Wolsey guilty under the Statute of Purveyance. He seemed to enjoy my blunders; the worst mistakes of Claudia, Nell and Lottie never provoked in him even a temptation to smile.

But the bad half-hour in my week was on Saturday afternoons when I went alone to him, and sat by his side whilst he spread out that week's history paper of mine before him and commenced on its faults and required an explanation of its ambiguities, and waited patiently with most courteous attention for my answers. Now and then, glancing up at him quickly, I caught a gleam of laughter deep down in his eyes. Yet when he spoke his voice was slow and grave and weighty.

It was Saturday afternoon in the middle of the term. I sat beside him at the table, listening meekly to his criticisms.

"You miss the point here, Miss Chrystal."

"Yes, Mr. Tudor."

"And here you speak of impeachment as though it were procedure by bill."

"Yes, Mr. Tudor."

"That is a somewhat grave mistake."

I could not acquiesce again. And the monosyllable "yes" was the only form of answer that came to me.

"And here, I think, you were required to discuss the constitutional importance of these events?"

"Yes, Mr. Tudor."

"You have not done so, Miss Chrystal."

"No—I am afraid—I am afraid not."

"You mistook the question, possibly?"

He was looking gravely at me, waiting. [illegible] my [illegible] answer, was not very much to the point. I spoke desperately.

"What is the good of it all?" I said. "What does it matter about the judicial system, and who has the control of taxation? What does it matter about the Parliament, and the courts, and all the dull old law? One can't really care for the [illegible]."

I had time while he sat surveying me to feel ashamed of my babyish, passionate speech.

"What made you think of devoting yourself to the study of constitutional history?" he said with gentle surprise. His gentleness seemed like satire. My eyes in spite of myself suddenly filled with tears. Suddenly he looked away from me. He asked me no more questions. For the next five minutes he talked rapidly without a pause. When I resolutely blinked back my tears and glanced at him, he was diligently disfiguring my history paper with crooked circles, and his face was less brown than ruddy.

After that day his eyes ceased to twinkle when he looked at me, he passed me over in class and put the puzzling questions to Nell and Claudia, and was almost gentle when I went alone to him. He gave up asking me to expound this theory and that argument which he had failed to follow, and, when he was forced to condemn my work, he worded his blame mildly and looked away as he spoke.

"He has forgiven you, Cis," said the girls. "He completely ignores you now, for which you are thankful, Cis, are you not?"

"Very thankful," I said. I said it impressively, for I needed to convince myself as well as the girls.

I was inconsistent, for I began to wish that he would find me amusing again, and to feel pangs of disappointment in class when he passed me over, and to desire, with quite unreasonable eagerness, that he should look at me again, even if his eyes should have laughter in their depths. But every week the laughter seemed further away. And if he was grave in class, he was graver still on Saturdays. He gazed steadily at my paper as he discussed it, and discussed it as though in a dream. He no longer thought me flippant, and conceited, and foolish, and tried to cure me. He no longer thought of me at all. It was only at the end of the term that he set aside his perfunctory tutor manner.

"Are you going home, Miss Chrystal?" he asked me, hesitatingly.

"Yes. Not at once though. For a week or two I am going to stay with Claudia—Miss Harrison, I mean. Then she will come home with me."

"I may be spending my holidays near you. Perhaps—possibly—we may meet each other."

"Oh yes, very possibly," I said. And suddenly I felt light-hearted at the thought of holidays. There was a little pause, and I rose and held out my hand.

"It is somewhere in Devonshire, is it not?" he said.

"What?"

"Your home."

"Yes. Axetown East. Quite a little place on the coast. Have you friends there, Mr. Tudor?"

"No," he said, doubtfully. "I believe—I believe the fishing is good?" And it did not strike me as strange that he should be going to a place in which he had no friends, and of which he did not know the name and county.

But I did not tell the girls what he had told me. It was only at the end of my visit to Claudia that I broke the news to her. I broke it casually.

"He came for the fishing," I said. "And father and the boys seem—accidentally—to have come across him."

"Never mind," said Claudia.

"No, it does not matter," I said resignedly.

But Claudia was sympathetic next day when we arrived at Axetown East. In a short fortnight Mr. Tudor had made great strides towards friendship with all at home. He had found favor with father and the boys; his hotel was comfortless, and he deserted it frequently. He came and went at all hours, laughed and smoked with the boys, and talked sensibly like an old friend with father. He was more bronzed than ever: for a fortnight he had been fishing and rowing and walking with energy. He laughed as I had sometimes suspected he could laugh. He had left his tutor manners behind him with cap and gown. Suddenly now, at the end of a fortnight, he had grown tired of fishing and of lonely boating and walking. He haunted our house. He seemed to be always where I was. Claudia was sympathetic. And, somehow, I felt traitorous when I received her sympathy. It was a still, warm summer evening a day or two after our arrival. We were in the drawing-room down-stairs and the French windows were open wide. Father was showing Mr. Tudor some views of places abroad where he had been stationed at different times. Suddenly, on the still air, came a voice from the garden. Claudia was coming up the path with my brother George.

"And that is the story," she said. "It doesn't seem quite a modest thing to say a man blushes when you speak to him. Poor Cis! she has never been happy in his presence since. He will spoil her holidays. We try to praise him sometimes, but as for Cis, she will never say any thing good of him. She really dislikes him now."

"That's a pity," said George, "for Tudor—poor beggar—is in love with her."

I do not think father had heard; he was engrossed in photographs of China. I did not venture to look at Mr. Tudor. I do not think that he looked at me. But an anecdote which father was relating was new to us when he told it again next day. It was an hour or two later that we found ourselves alone together. But George's words were ringing in my brain still. It seemed natural, now that we were alone, that he should go back at once straight to those words.

"It is true," he said gently. "I did not mean to tell you yet. I meant to try to win your love first."

I did not speak. He was standing near me by the open window, and he took my hand and let it rest in his.

"Do I spoil your holidays?" he asked gravely. "Are you unhappy, as your friend says, because I am here?"

I hesitated for a moment. "I do not think that Claudia knows," I answered.

"Cicely, I am very bold," he said eagerly—"very bold to speak to you now so soon. If I make you unhappy I will go. If I have no chance—no chance at all—tell me, Cicely, and send me away."

But I said nothing.

"Send me away now," he said, pleadingly.

I looked up at him. I could think of no proper answer. "I do not want to send you away," I said.—Belgravia.

A Monkey's Mathematics.

"I tell you, Bradley, that's the smartest dog in the world."

"No smarter than a monkey I saw on Walnut street yesterday. He belonged to an Italian organ-grinder. He could count."

"The Italian?"

"No, the monkey."

"Oh, nonsense, Bradley!"

"Anyhow, I saw him run up a column."—Philadelphia Call.

CAN'T BE BELIEVED.

Mr. Blaine's Late Statement Regarding Civil-Service Reform Applied to the Test of His Public Record and Known Character.

It was hoped that Mr. Blaine would be permitted to retire to the reflective shades of his Augusta home, after reducing the Republican plurality in Pennsylvania from 81,000 to 43,000, without being called on to deny any of the reports of his stump oratory. Their prevention, he now tells us, was taken to make these reports conform not to what he said but what he wished published that he had said, and yet one report got abroad that has called for a denial from the champion denier of the country. His speeches were accurately reported, he tells us, for the Philadelphia Press by skilled stenographers and yet a speech of his at Huntington, Pa., has been so "perverted" that he has been accused of "repudiating the Civil-Service reform with a sneer." It is unfortunate for Mr. Blaine that the public is used to his denials, and takes them for just what they are worth—"springes to catch woodcocks." Since his celebrated denial of April 24, 1876, of any interest in certain railway projects, except as an investing purchaser, was proved false in the face of Congress and of the world by his own letters, no person or politician has ever accepted as true any denial by Mr. Blaine in any thing in which he had an interest. People may admire him and political managers may worship him, but no one places any dependence on his word or disingenuousness. His reputation for veracity has been shattered into too many fragments to be patched into a water-holding vessel again.

In regard to the matter of his present denial, he is entitled to the widest circulation of his declared conversion to the principle of Civil-Service reform. It is so adroitly put that we repeat his words. "It is scarcely necessary to say," he writes, "that I have never repudiated reform in the civil service, nor abated my interest therein." When it is recalled that Mr. Blaine, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, appointed the committee on the subject which tomahawked the reform and executed the historical war-dance over its corpse, the true inwardness of his use of the word "repudiate" may be perceived. He never had any part in the reform to repudiate. He never took any favoring interest in it to abate. From the day he appeared in Washington as a lobbyist for the Spencer rifle manufacturers to the present time, the whole tenor of his utterances and practices have been inimical to the reform. His political life and methods have been one sneer at it, and to-day nobody would believe him were he to say, with Henry Cabot Lodge: "I approve the principle that employment in those offices in the civil service the duties of which are administrative and not political should be open on equal terms to every citizen without regard to party. If elected, I should favor the speedy extension of the present reformed system to all offices and employments of the Government to which it is applicable, and I favor the repeal of the laws which vacate a large number of non-political offices every four years, and the substitution therefor of a tenure during good behavior."

Even if Mr. Blaine were to make such a declaration as this the people would not believe he meant it, and politicians would exchange winks with Mr. Blaine behind the people's back. All his prattle about aping English civil-service methods is demagogy, for Mr. Blaine is too able a man not to know that the part of wise statesmanship is to take leaves from the experience of every nation and people now struggling with the problem of government or that ever sank beneath the weight of false leaders and selfish statesmen. His idea of American Civil-Service reform is embraced in the Jacksonian maxim: "To the victors belong the spoils."—Chicago News.

CAPTURED FACTS.

—A Blaine paper says: "The American voter thinks." He does. He thinks Jim Blaine is no man for the Presidency.—Chicago Times.

—In 1884 the Republican Presidential ticket lacked just ten votes of a clear majority in the old Bay State. In 1888 it will lack 10,000 votes of not a majority, but a plurality. The next Presidential vote of Massachusetts will be cast for a Democrat. Two years hence New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Connecticut certainly, and Maine under certain conditions, may be found in the Democratic column. Good, faithful, united work will accomplish this glorious result.—Boston Globe.

—Grover Cleveland is one of the strongest men intellectually and in all that goes to make up the genuine statesman that has occupied the Presidential chair since the days of Washington, and he is daily growing in intellectual girth, in far-seeing wisdom, and in the affection of the thoughtful and law-loving people of the land, but he has arrived at his present eminence not simply by his attention to the Civil-Service law, but by his broad and statesman-like action on all questions of public policy with which he has been called upon to deal.—Selma (Ala.) Times.

—For a certain length of time James G. Blaine can conduct himself with as much diplomacy as any public man that ever lived, but for sustained circumspection it is not worth while to look in his direction. The character of the man is well shown by his proneness to weaken at critical moments. This might argue insincerity on his part; that he is passing himself off for something which he is not, and that, at times forgetting the part which he is playing, he plainly reveals his real disposition, but by his admirers it will be held to be nothing more serious than the unfortunate weakness of an impulsive man.—Chicago Herald.

A Conclusive Explanation.

Northern Republicans who wonder that their party has so little strength among the whites of the cotton States would find a sufficient explanation if they should contrast the condition of these States under Democratic rule with the situation when the carpet-baggers were in power. Take Alabama, for instance. When the Spencer gang controlled the State there were constant collisions between the races, the finances were demoralized, the school system was in a wretched plight, and the aspect of affairs was so discouraging that many good citizens were removing to other States. Now harmonious relations exist between whites and blacks, the cost of government has been lessened, the tax rate has been reduced, and returning prosperity not only has arrested the exodus of citizens, but has begun to attract immigrants from other States and countries. Best of all, the school system has been greatly improved, and Governor O'Neal was able to say in his recent message to the Legislature that "no other State appropriates so large a proportion of its taxes to public schools, and in no other is the school fund so economically handled or so nearly all paid to those who earn it in the school-room." The Governor also gave the assurance that "as prosperity gives them ability, the people will increase the resources of the school system and its usefulness."—N. Y. Post.

CLEVELAND AND [illegible]

When certain [illegible] of the [illegible] Administration are short of [illegible] for their guns, they fall back upon the oft-repeated charges of [illegible] in the relations between the President and the members of his Cabinet. How absurd most of the stories of this character are when confronted with the facts! And none is more absurd than the one which is often repeated that the President is a sort of petty despot who has changed the official relation of Cabinet officers from the old one of advisers to that of clerks in charge, though not in control, of the several departments.

The writers who are continually putting afloat assertions of this character know very well that they can not be denied or [illegible]. The President and the several members of his Cabinet alone can with a knowledge of the facts dispute such assertions, but for the President, or any member of his official family, to enter into a denial of such allegations would be incompatible with the dignity of the offices they hold. Fortunately, however, the common sense of the American public can be reached, even though direct denials from the interested persons can not be had. The logic of facts in this as in other matters is indisputable.

What are the facts as to Mr. Cleveland and his Cabinet that are known or may be learned by every one? Mr. Cleveland came into office as President without practical experience of National Administration. He selected as his Cabinet officers three men of long experience in national affairs as Representatives and Senators in Congress; three whose services in the higher line of political organization had made their names household words in their party, and the seventh a jurist of unquestioned ability and respectability. This Cabinet, thus selected, he has held intact for nearly two years, longer than any President since Van Buren, except Presidents Fillmore and Pierce, who did not change their Cabinets at all, and Buchanan, whose Cabinet lasted three years without a change in its personnel. Harrison changed the membership of his Cabinet in the first year of his administration. Polk in the first year reorganized his. Lincoln changed his Secretaries of War in the first year after his election. Grant changed his Secretary of State and of the Interior within a month, and Hayes within two years changed his Secretaries of War and of the Interior, his Postmaster-General and his Attorney-General.

In spite of assaults upon almost every member of his Cabinet, which have been characterized by malice, mendacity and violence, Mr. Cleveland's official family in the twenty-first month of its establishment remains the same as it was when he gathered it about him on March 4, 1885.

In view of these facts alone, can any thinking person credit the assertion that there have been serious differences in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet or that he has treated his Cabinet officers with disrespect? Is it credible that Secretary Bayard, with his seventeen years of experience of public life, would submit to be treated as a mere executive clerk by a man who was a novice in National affairs when he had attained to the degree of master? That Mr. Lamar, a representative statesman of the South, who was a national legislator ere Mr. Cleveland had cast his first vote, would permit himself to be thus slighted? That Mr. Manning, Mr. Cleveland's friend and counsellor before the Presidency had dawned upon his wildest ambition: his guiding spirit in later days and the manager of his campaign for election to the office of Chief Magistrate, would brook such treatment now? Each of these three has had excellent opportunities to withdraw from the Cabinet, without trouble, had they wished it, and yet they remained beside their chief. Surely, the common sense of the American people will assume that these men did remain because they desired to assist that chief in administering the laws of the land, not as executive clerks, but as advisers and counsellors. And so with all the others.

And in like manner with regard to the stories of discord and disagreement within the Cabinet. The standing of the gentlemen who compose it, and the fact that they show no disposition to retire from it, ought to be sufficient proof that there is no foundation for statements which discredit their high character, and which go uncontradicted by them, for the sole reason that the dignity of the office they hold does not permit of their stooping to resent such imputations.—N. Y. Graphic.

Blaine and Logan.

I heard an interesting story the other day about the last call Logan made upon Blaine. Before the Republican convention of 1884, Mr. Blaine sought a conference with Mrs. Logan, whom he told he did not expect to be nominated, and through her arranged for a coalition between the Blaine and Logan managers, William Walter Phelps acting as the go-between. Logan was assured that the Blaine strength would be cast for him on the second ballot. The day before the convention Mr. Phelps telegraphed the General that it would be impossible to do that, and asked if he would accept the Vice-Presidency. Logan replied that he would prefer his seat in the Senate, and emphatically declined. Then, when Blaine was nominated, the second place on the ticket was given him nolens volens. When his friends returned from the convention and reported to Logan all that had occurred, and charged treachery on Blaine's part, the General got in his carriage with Mrs. Logan and drove to Blaine's house on Lafayette square for an explanation. They sent up their cards and after waiting a long time the servant returned with the word that Mr. Blaine was not feeling well, and asked to be excused. That was the end of the long intimacy between the two families, and Blaine and Logan have since met only in the presence of large numbers of people in the most formal manner.—Chicago News.

What He Would Do.

If the appeals of the Plumed Knight to the war prejudices of the people mean any thing they mean that if the Republican party can get back into power with him at its head an attempt will be made to control the Southern States from Washington, as was the case during the Administration of General Grant. As a result of that policy the South became solid. Business depression was everywhere noticeable and the majority of the people were impoverished. Neither whites nor blacks made any progress, and nearly all of the former slave States were given over to turmoil and disaster.

What infatuation is it that induces a man who wishes to stand well with the people to strive to turn them back to the old regime of blood, despair and ruin? From the standpoint of the Northern Republican nothing could be more short-sighted than the readoption of a policy which would have no other result than that which made it abhorred by every body except the contemptible adventurers who profited by their country's sorrows and [illegible].—Chicago Herald.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

A Body of Men Composed of Most Excellent Material.

The smallness of the regular army, which may be regarded mainly as a police for keeping the Indians in order, renders it essential that the militia of the various States, on whom we would have to rely in case of National emergency, should be kept up to a standard of efficiency and discipline requisite for such an emergency. The National Government has been devoting much attention to this subject, and the annual report of the Adjutant-General contains some valuable suggestions and interesting points on the citizen soldiery of the Republic. The result of the inspection of State troops convinces General Drum that there is shown "a slowly maturing temper and character, destined to still more closely unite the regular army and militia." This is a flattering tribute from such a source and an encouragement to our National guard. General Drum's recommendations are highly practical, and they should be deeply considered by the military authorities in each State. It must be acknowledged that there is yet too much of the holiday character about State encampments and too little of the actual business of the soldier's life. Much valuable time is lost in elementary company's drills, which should be confined to the armory, and while the troops are in camp they should be instructed and practiced in skirmish and battalion drills. General Drum also recommends a plain, but serviceable, fatigue uniform for the troops of each State. There has been a marked improvement in the appearance of our citizen soldiers of late years and less of the jim-crack, toy business. The recommendation to provide the troops with improved arms and ammunition of the same pattern as the regular army, is one that will be unhesitatingly concurred in by every member of the militia. The admirable system put in force in this State by General Porter, by which the military establishment is brought more directly under the control and supervision of headquarters, might be profitably adopted in all other States. It makes the National guard a well appointed, easily handled force and fulfils the prime objects of maintaining such a force. There is excellent material in the militia of the various States, and, if General Drum's suggestions are carried out, that material may be brought to a high state of efficiency.—Albany Argus.

The Volcanoes of Japan.

The last part of the "Transactions of the Seismological Society of Japan" is wholly occupied with an elaborate paper by Prof. Milne, of Tokio, on "The Volcanoes of Japan." No fewer than 129 volcanoes are indicated on the map which accompanies the memoir, and of these 51 are still active. About 233 eruptions are recorded, and it is noted that the greater number have occurred in the months of February and April. One of the most interesting parts of the paper refers to the famous Fuji-san, or, as foreigners generally call it, Fusiyama. After many observations Prof. Milne concludes that the height of this mons excelsus et singularis, as Kampfer termed it, lies between 12,400 and 12,450 feet.—N. Y. Post.

HEWITT'S NEW BILL.

To Provide for Special Deposits of Public Money.

And to Anticipate the Payment of Interest on the Bonded Debt.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—In the House to-day Mr. Hewitt introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the bonded debt of the United States and to provide for special deposits of the public money. The following is the text of the bill:

SECTION 1. That out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to anticipate the payment of so much of the interest on the interest-bearing bonds of the United States as shall be in excess of the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, by the payment in gross of such sum in each case as shall be equal to the aggregate present worth of such excess of interest thereon. And, for the purpose of ascertaining such present worth, the interest upon the amount paid by the United States in anticipation of such excess of interest shall be computed at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, reckoned quarterly, so as to secure to the United States the benefit of compound interest thereon.

SEC. 2. That when such payment of interest in anticipation of the maturity thereof shall have been accepted by any holder of the bonded indebtedness of the United States, the bonds shall be distinctly stamped and properly indorsed, in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe so as to show the reduced rate of interest thereafter to be paid thereon, and the coupons, if any, shall be cut off and canceled, and for the coupons so canceled shall be substituted new coupons bearing the reduced rate of interest, and the bonds so stamped shall be receivable by the Comptroller of the Currency as security for the issue of the circulating notes of any national banking association to the full extent of the par value of the said bonds instead of 90 per cent., as now required by law.

SEC. 3. That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit from time to time with any national banking association any portion of the money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated upon the security of an equal amount of the bonded or other indebtedness of the United States; provided, the whole amount of special deposits shall not at any time exceed [illegible]; and all such deposits shall be subject to call upon such notice as the Secretary of the Treasury may see fit to prescribe.

Indians in Beecher's Church.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 13.—A score of Indians from Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, in their native costumes and with waving plumes, were seen in the pews of Plymouth church yesterday morning, and the savages behaved as decorously as the other members of the congregation. They listened attentively to the sermon of Mr. Beecher, and the majority of the people in the church did not know of their presence until Mr. Beecher referred to the "sons of the forest" who were present. In the midst of the sermon some street urchins were heard giving imitation war whoops outside the church.

—Customer—"How much will you charge to give me a reading of my head?" Phrenologist—"Well, sir, you can have a verbal examination for fifty cents; a written one for one dollar." C.—"Go ahead; just a verbal one." P.—"Well, in the first place, you have the organ of combativeness very largely developed." C.—"How! What's that you say?" DANGEROUS GAME.

A Large Number of Two-Dollar Bills Being Converted Into Tens and Put Into Circulation.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 10.—A new swindle has been invented here by the counterfeiters and shovers of the queer which is calculated to deceive almost any one. During the last three or four years the business of counterfeiting bank notes and greenbacks has become very dangerous and almost impossible on account of the paper of which the currency is manufactured. The new scheme is to change two-dollar bills into tens and it is so cleverly done that many small shopkeepers have been victimized. The dodge has been worked successfully in the Third and Thirteenth street police districts. Several days ago Lieutenant Hohsman discovered one of the bogus ten-dollar notes. The bill had been altered in an ingenious manner and at first sight appeared to be genuine. The figure 10 had been cut from the imitation bill advertisements and carefully pasted over the 2 on the greenbacks. To still further deceive the unwary the two dollars printed in the center of the bill was mutilated and blurred beyond recognition. A woman named Stricher, who keeps a cigar store at [illegible] Vine street, took one of the changed notes yesterday and carried it to Hammond street Station, where the police took it as a basis upon which to act in searching for the counterfeiters. It has been ascertained that a large number of these bogus bills are in circulation, but the police can't locate the men who are doing the work. The United States Secret Service officers will take hold of the matter at once. It is thought that the criminals are located somewhere in this city. The cleverness which they have shown in doing the work indicate that they are old timers who know all about counterfeiting.

THREE LIVES LOST

By Inhaling the Gas From a Stove Inadvertently Left Open.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—Mrs. McClure and her grown daughter and son were asphyxiated by coal gas last night at their residence, in the suburban town of Maplewood. They closed all the doors and windows tightly on retiring and forgot to replace a stove-lid after replenishing the parlor fire. Mrs. McClure appeared to have fallen senseless while trying to get out to the open air. Her daughter was lying lifeless across a chair a few feet from her bed. The son was on his knees before the door, and evidently had become unconscious during a stupefied search for the knob of the door.

Shot His Daughter for a Burglar.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Dec. 12.—J. C. Hill, a prominent resident of Edgewood, a wealthy suburb of this city, mistook his daughter for a burglar and shot her through the neck, inflicting a dangerous and, it is feared, fatal wound. Mr. Hill made collections of about $5,000, which he took to his home to keep over night. His daughter who had a bad toothache, arose early this morning and went down to the library to the fire to warm herself. Her father, hearing the noise, thought burglars were in the house, and taking his revolver, followed her down stairs. When he reached the door of the library, he fired, the ball striking his daughter in the back of the neck, and passing to the front. The young lady is in a critical condition, and her father is almost crazed with grief.

Bold Safe Robbery.

They mixed and drank several glasses of liquor while in the saloon. The robbery is one of the most daring on record in this city.

TO SING OR NOT TO SING.

The Question of Catholics Warbling in Protestant Worship.

Archbishop Ryan Says That They Can Not—It is an Established Principle, and Not a Decree of the Recent Plenary Council.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 10.—A Cincinnati dispatch published here to-day announced that Archbishop Elder had forbidden Roman Catholic vocalists and musicians to employ their talents in Protestant churches and intimated that the promulgation of the order was the result of an action taken by the recent Plenary Council held in Baltimore. The attention of Archbishop Ryan was called to the dispatch with the request that he would give some information of the action of the council on the question. He replied that to the best of his knowledge no discussion had been had on the subject. "It is a long-established rule of the Church," he said, "that singers and musicians who are members shall not use their talents in other churches, and I take it that Archbishop Elder has merely made this announcement to call the attention of those who may have disregarded the requirements of that offense. The principle is well established and the Church deals with this offense as it does with others. Of course, if we have members who desire to sing in other churches, they are at perfect liberty to exercise their individual rights, but the moment they do so they cease to belong to the Roman Catholic Church, and can only return to it in the same manner as those who for other offenses have been removed from its protection." Concerning the decree recently issued by Archbishop Ryan, that hereafter the Catholic churches would not be allowed to accept money raised by balls, the Archbishop said there was nothing to add to what had already been published. "The Plenary Council decreed it," he said, "and I promulgated the order. I must decline to express any opinion of the action of the Council."

BOSTON, Dec. 10.—A City of Mexico special to the Herald says: "El Partido Liberal (Administration organ) says, in its leader to-day, that President Cleveland's message shows the American Government to be well disposed toward Mexico, and that it seems reasonable to suppose that the Government at Washington has perceived the magnitude and importance of the commercial and industrial relations of the two countries. Assurance is given that Mexico feels herself attracted by the generous and progressive interests of the country of Washington. Hope is expressed that the citizens of the United States may not interpret the patriotic spirit of the Mexican people in recent international incident as indicating hostility toward the Nation, with which it is hoped relations may become more and more intimate and friendly. The belief is expressed that the Washington Cabinet will modify its ideas regarding the principle of extra territorial jurisdiction, which is maintained also by other civilized nations. It is also said that this difference of opinion on a legal point will not prejudice the preparation of a new treaty of friendship and commerce. The entire article is cordial in tone, and corresponds to the sentiments of Minister Mariscal. The article may be taken to express the views of President Diaz.

MR. MANNING'S POLICY.

The Financial Aims of the Administration Outlined.

Some Novel Propositions Advanced in the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury—Silver, Public Debt and Reduction of Taxation Discussed.

The report then takes on the form of an essay on the monetary history of the United States. "The act of 1873 did not demonetize silver. It retired no silver coin from circulation, but took a sure way to keep all our fractional silver coin at home. The act of 1878 did not remonetize silver, but it did limit monetization to treasury purchases for non-fractional coin. It took a sure way to keep all our non-fractional silver coin at home.

"The method of the two acts is identical. Exportation would only be possible at a loss on the silver coined under either act. In both acts monetization is denied except to treasury purchases. The door of the mint is shut to the public by both acts. Both acts are innocent of a share in causing the monetary dislocation, although the act of 1878 helps to prolong it. In 1873 we had not escaped the paper-money plague, and our resumption of the use of the two metals and current redemption of paper did not begin till the monetary dislocation was far advanced.

"The action of the United States in 1834, changing the ratio from fifteen to sixteen, had forestalled the act of 1873. To open our mints for the coinage of silver at sixteen to one of gold, while France was coining silver 15½ to one of gold, was, so to say, equivalent to closing our mints to the coinage of silver at all. Two ratios can not live together face to face. In the money world from that year the United States became a gold mono-metallic power, and such they have ever since remained, both when they did intend it and when they did not.

"Offering by the open mint to both metals, free coinage of silver for silver-owners into legal-tender dollars would stop the use of the mint for free coinage of gold by gold-owners. It would stop the simultaneous circulation of gold and silver dollars. The gold dollar would be at a premium and be exported. It would neither restore nor tend to restore the world-wide use of the two metals in a rated equivalence, which is the cure for the monetary dislocation, as their disjoined use has been its cause.

"I will add but one suggestion, which should be fatal to the free-silver coinage proposal. As our limited silver coinage paralyzes, so our free silver coinage at this moment would destroy the power of the United States to promote the restoration of silver to its old and equal place in the monetary order."

A negative reply is also given to the proposition that the United States continue to buy more than $2,000,000 of silver. "To stop the purchase of silver is our only choice, our duty and our interest." The report continues:

"Stopping the purchase and coinage of silver is the first step and the best which the United States can take in doing their great part to repair the monetary dislocation of the world. Its origin was foreign, its remedy is international. The time is ripe for this powerful commonwealth to enter decisively upon that international transaction. The ripe moment must not be let slip.

"If the law were repealed which makes compulsory treasury purchases of silver, and if that repeal were accompanied by the declaration of Congress that the United States now hold themselves in readiness to unite with France, Germany and Great Britain in opening their mints to free coinage of silver and gold at a ratio fixed by international agreement, it is the deliberate judgment of the undersigned that before the expiration of another fiscal year this international monetary dislocation might be corrected by such an international concurrence, the two monetary metals restored to their old and universal functions as the one standard measure of prices for the world's commodities, the depression of trade and industry relieved, and a general prosperity renewed.

"To stop the purchase of silver will arrest the growth of that standing shame of our finance, the treasury surplus. It will put us in the way of abolishing the same altogether, not by cheating our creditors, shaving our pensioners, or crippling our wage-earners, but by enabling the treasury to hold the silver dollar firmly in a local parity with the gold dollar until we can unite with the leading Powers in restoring and establishing their permanent equivalence. Another year's delay in stopping the silver purchase is the loss of remunerative prices upon another wheat crop of the United States, is another year's stimulus to India's competition for the foreign markets of our agricultural product, and a reduction of our ability to hold that market against any competition in the world (measured by a common money).

"I respectfully recommend to the wisdom of Congress the unconditional repeal of the act of February 28, 1878."

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The public debt is stated as consisting of four principal items—$346,[illegible] of legal tender notes, $64,000,000 of three per cents of 1882, $250,000,000 of 4½ per cents of 1891, and $738,000,000 of four per cents of 1907. This has been paid off at an average of [illegible] a year, the $125,000,000 of surplus revenue being partly used for this and the purchase of silver, "a needless depletion of the people's earnings which the present Congress can completely cure."

The last of the public debt subject to call, $64,[illegible] of 3 per cents, Secretary Manning promises to have called for payment on or before October 1, 1887.

"Employment for the proceeds of our surplus taxation, reasons for delay in reducing our surplus taxation, can no longer be found in a rapid payment of the funded debt. Setting aside the vanishing three per cents and the unfunded debt of [illegible], the residue of the public debt has been in such wise funded by our predecessors that $250,000,000 can not be paid, except by purchase at a high premium to the bondholder, before September 1, 1891, and that $737,770,400 can not be paid except by purchase at a high premium to the bondholder, before July 1, 1907. On and after those dates, respectively, but not until then, those loans are payable, at the option of the United States, at their face and without premium. To continue our present surplus taxation, and to employ its proceeds now or for some years to come in giving to the bondholder any such, or still higher, premiums by anticipatory purchase of those bonds before they are due and payable at par, is a fiscal policy so unnecessary, extravagant and merciless to the industrious toilers of our land, from whose earnings, profits or capital are deducted and taken all the revenues of the treasury, that I can not presume their representatives in Congress would let stand any law devolving upon the head of this department such a thriftless task."

The sinking fund, according to Treasurer Jordan, will effect the payment of the whole public debt, greenbacks and bonds, by the year 1908, within a year after the last funded debt becomes due and payable. The Secretary comments on this fact says that it will be without excuse of surplus taxation if his recommendations are heeded. Besides the repeal of the Silver-Purchase act he urges the repeal of the act for the compulsory post-redemption issues and reissues of legal tender notes. "Coin, not promises, is fit for legal tender."

REDUCTION OF SURPLUS TAXATION.

The tariff on raw materials is attacked vigorously. "Indeed," the report says, "it is my own belief that whenever we begin taking off the shackles of war-tariff taxes on raw materials such increased prosperity will follow to the employers who dread it, and such larger and steadier employment to the wage-earners who need it, by increasing the sales abroad of our own manufactures, and by whipping out foreign competitors in our own markets, that we shall see our income from imported manufactures dwindle so fast as not only to compel the retention of these most fit items of revenue—whisky, tobacco and beer—but perhaps to drive us back to getting ten millions of revenue from two cents a pound tax on coffee and half as much from tea.

"Under our system of government by party, and the rule of the majority, I do not think it unbecoming even in a public officer at this time to recall certain public and specific pledges in respect to the sum and methods of federal taxation, subject to which the people of the United States, in the exercise of a lawful election, took away the administration of this Government from the party intrusted therewith for a quarter of a century and lodged it in other hands. Public life will cease to be the ambition of honorable and worthy men if the deliberate pledges and professed principles of political parties are not a law to their leaders."

The report then quotes the pledge of the Democratic platform to reduce taxation, and continues:

"These pledges can never be fulfilled without a reform in the sum and methods of Federal taxation. Nor can our country ever profitably [illegible]

[illegible] the consumer, who alone is taxed.

"'Protection' is also a misnomer. It implies a poverty elsewhere. That superiority over all great industry of ours does not equal [illegible] It implies infants here and adults elsewhere. Such is not our reputation. It implies that amid competition universal, where the fittest survive we shall perish. But it is everywhere else believed that whenever we shall release ourselves from bad laws and enter that competition unmanacled rivals will be distanced and our primacy established in the markets and commerce of the world.

HIGH WAGES TO AMERICAN LABOR.

"Now, one proud fact attests the substance of our prosperity, and is the guaranty as well as proof of our power to hold against all competition the markets of the United States for everything we choose to dig or fabricate or grow, and to command and control for our surplus products, against all rivals, any foreign market. We pay to labor the highest wages in the world. Highly paid labor signifies the most efficient labor—signifies that high wages are the most profitable wages—signifies that the high rate is earned.

"Were trade as free with and within all the united states of Europe as it is among the United States of America the great surplus products of our industry, including the manufactured, would have the pick of foreign markets, for the reason that our labor, being the most highly paid and insuring lowest percentage of labor cost, would everywhere surpass rivalry. The low wages of pauper labor signify least efficiency, which is but another name for highest percentage of labor-cost in the product. Other things being equal, it is obvious that high wages can never be paid unless it is profitable to pay them, and it can only be a good business to pay the highest wages, because the efficiency of those who earn them vindicates its superiority by the reduction of labor cost in the product.

"High wages to labor and cheaper product are correlative terms. Low wages to labor and a costlier product are correlative terms. The one implies the other wherever labor competes with labor upon otherwise equal ground. What pauper stands any chance competing with the intelligent artisan? The 'pauper labor of Europe' cry is a bugaboo, except that, in truth, our war-tariff taxes favor 'pauper labor' at the expense of American labor. Its products are not fenced out by our tariff laws. They come in because we ourselves destroy our own easy power of competition, even in our home market. By tariff taxes on raw materials we fence in our own surplus products, making them cost too much to compete at home, and, of course, too much to compete abroad with manufacturers from untaxed raw materials.

THE BEST TAXES TO RETAIN.

"Another proposal is to reduce taxation by cutting down the tax on whisky, tobacco and beers and removing the duty on sugar.

"Nobody pays a tax on tobacco except the consumers of tobacco. They are willing to pay for the luxury, and they ask no relief. Any probable reduction of the tax on whisky would be more likely to increase the revenue than to diminish it. The price of sugar has fallen to an exceedingly cheap rate. Our own sugar crop is so very small a part of the total amount of sugar we consume that sugar ranks next to articles wholly producted abroad, like tea and coffee, in suitability for taxation, on the ground that its consumption is universal; that the tax is easily and cheaply collected; that the increased price paid by the consumers is an unconsidered trifle, and that what is taken from the tax-payers goes into the tax-payers' treasury, not into a few private bank accounts.

THE TAXES TO BE REMITTED.

"The taxes to be first remitted are those which prevent or hinder the sale of our surplus products in foreign markets. Their removal will set capital in motion by the promise of better returns, enlarge the steady employment, and increase the annual income of many thousand wage-earners, whose prosperity will diffuse prosperity. These taxes are the duties on raw materials, and the most widely injurious of them is the tax upon raw wool.

"I respectfully recommend to Congress that they confer upon the wage-earners of the United States the boon of untaxed clothing, and in order thereto the immediate passage of an act simply and solely placing raw wool upon the free list.

"Of course a repeal of the duty on raw wool should be followed by, but need not wait for, a compensating adjustment of the duties on manufactured woolens, while our manufacturers are learning the lesson that with the highest paid and most efficient labor in the world, with the most skilled management and the best inventive appliances, they need fear no competition from any rivals in the world, in home or foreign markets, so long as they can buy their wools free of every kind. But the common, daily clothing of the American people need not be taxed.

FIERCE BLAZE IN BUFFALO.

Several Large Business Places Burning—Loss Estimated at $500,000.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 8, 3:30 a. m.—At 2:30 o'clock this morning fire started in the large confectionery establishment of Sibley & Holmwood, at the corner of Wells and Seneca streets. The fire quickly spread to adjacent buildings, and the Brezel House, Campbell & Reynolds' boot and shoe store and the Michigan stove works, Swift & Stambachs proprietors, were soon burning fiercely. A high wind prevails, and burning sparks are flying for several blocks. There was great excitement at the Brozel House, the guests leaving in their night-clothes. Several small stores on the opposite side of the street from which the fire started are burning. The walls of Sibley & Holmwood's fell at 3:05. It is reported several firemen are buried under them. The Brozel House will be a total loss. All the guests escaped. The fire has reached Shermans, Jewett & Co.'s large stove warehouse. The loss is now estimated at $500,000.

HIS LAST SLEEP.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 8.—A deliberate and cold-blooded murder was committed in this city at an early hour yesterday morning. At about eight o'clock a boy rushed into the police station and stated that a man had been shot by his wife in the rooms occupied by Emil Peuseyres and his wife in the Miller Block. Officers immediately proceeded to the place. They were met by the woman, who appeared to be in a high state of excitement. She said her husband was in a bedroom. A cloth had been nailed over the window. In the bed lay the body of Emil Peuseyres. A bullet had penetrated his heart. The shooting occurred at about 6 a. m., according to the best reports, and the man was evidently lying asleep in bed when the murderess fired the fatal shot.

The Question of Statehood.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Dec. 8.—A special to the Evening Journal from Watertown, D. T., gives an interview with Governor Mellette, of South Dakota, as to the meeting of the State Legislature at Huron, December 15. He says the Legislature will strive to secure statehood by all honorable means. It will submit the amendment to the people repealing the law which prevents the State officers from exercising official functions, after which they will give notice that the Territorial Government will cease and the State Government begin.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

Second Session.

WASHINGTON, Dec. [illegible].—SENATE.—[illegible] Cheney, N. H., was sworn in in place of Senator Pike, deceased. Bills introduced: To retire legal tender and National bank notes of small denomination, and for the issue of coin certificates; to exempt from duty imported sugar and molasses and also imported lumber and boards. Mr. Morrill offered the following resolution: "Resolved, That the purpose of making any revision of the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests, not to injure any domestic industries, but to promote their healthy growth so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital involved, and without depriving American labor of ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country, appears so obviously hopeless and impracticable that any further attempts at revision by the present Congress, in contravention of the foregoing cardinal declarations, are to be regarded as inexpedient and detrimental to the revival of the trade and industry of the country." Adjourned.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: To change the law in relation to the amount of U. S. bonds required to be kept on deposit by National banks as security for circulating notes; for the deposit of gold or silver coin or bullion as security for National bank circulation; for the relief of the U. S. Supreme Court and to expedite business in that court; compelling payment to the Government for the use of public lands by cattle companies; to amend oleomargarine bill; to change time for beginning of terms of Congress; to prevent contraction of the currency. The Senate bill for relief of graduates of the Military Academy was called up and passed. A bill appropriating $200,000 for the establishment at Fort Riley, Kan., of a permanent school of instruction for cavalry and light artillery was passed. The House decided by a vote of 101 to 27, to consider the Senate Electoral count bill, with the proposed House amendments. Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—SENATE.—Memorials were presented and bills introduced. Resolutions calling for information in regard to the oleomargarine tax; for the erection of a monument to negro soldiers and to place General Alexander S. Webb on the retired list were offered. The House bill for the relief of settlers in Nebraska and Kansas was made a special order for Tuesday next. The bill extending the right of suffrage to women was considered, Mr. Blair making a speech. A message from the President on the fisheries question was received, and after an executive session the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE.—Objection was made to the immediate passage of a bill admitting free of duty material for the rebuilding of Eastport, Maine. It was referred to the Ways and Means Committee. A bill was passed entitling certain officers and enlisted men to pay and emoluments from the time named in their commissions the same as if mustered in at that date. A resolution making a bill for the consideration of certain naval bureaus a special order for December 15 was agreed to. The bill extending the free delivery system was called up but went over as unfinished business. The electoral count bill was taken up. Messrs. Dibble, (S. C.), Cooper (O.), Eden and Adams (Ill.), made speeches. Mr. E. Caldwell gave notice he would call the previous question to-morrow. The House at 4 p. m. adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—SENATE.—A bill was introduced for the redemption of trade dollars. After some resolutions had been offered, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Mr. Morrill's tariff resolution. Messrs. Morrill, Beck and Sherman made speeches. Senator Dawes got the floor, and the Senate, at 3:30 p. m., adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE.—The bill extending the free-delivery system was passed. Also a bill authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service. The Electoral count bill was passed without division. The bill creating a Department of Agriculture and Labor was taken up and discussed. Pending debate, the sundry civil appropriation bill was reported, and at 5 p. m., the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—After the reading of the journal Mr. Campbell (N. Y.) announced with sorrow and regret the death of his colleague, Mr. Dowdney and offered resolutions expressive of the regret with which the announcement of the death had been received by the House, and providing for a joint committee of the Senate and House to attend the funeral. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the House, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, at 12:20 adjourned until to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—A bill was passed extending the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, known as the Public Land Strip, and providing that this land shall be subject to entry by actual settlers under the Homestead law. The House then went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, in the chair) on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill. In the course of the general debate, Mr. Lanham (Tex.) made an appeal in favor of the redemption of the trade dollar; and, alluding to the standard silver dollar, he declared that its coinage would never be suspended, no matter who might recommend to the contrary. Mr. Herbert, of Alabama, said that while the Sundry Civil bill appropriated less than the bill of last year, the decrease was attributable to the fact that the Committee on Appropriation had surrendered jurisdiction over the items for navy yards, and the new naval observatory, maintaining that those items could be provided for in the regular Naval appropriation bill. He contended, on the contrary, that the appropriations for the objects named should be made in the Sundry Civil bill, which would then, instead of showing a decrease, exceed in amount of appropriations the bill of last year. Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, argued that the Naval Committee had proper jurisdiction over the subject of navy yards, but pointed out that even were they provided for in the pending measure the bill would still carry less money than that of last year. Pending further discussion the committee arose and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—SENATE.—The credentials were presented of Senator Edmunds for the full term commencing March 4, 1887. Among numerous bills introduced were the following: To amend the Revised Statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of bonded goods; providing a new basis for the circulation of national bank notes; to authorize the reduction of U. S. bonds and circulation of national bank notes. The electoral count bill was reported from the House and laid on the table. The Morrill tariff resolution was discussed by Messrs. Dawes and McPherson. Mr. Morrill moved to refer his resolution to the Finance Committee, but withdrew his motion and the resolution went over. Notice of the death of Mr. Dowdney being received, a committee was appointed to attend the funeral, and as a mark of respect the Senate adjourned at 3:35 p. m.

HOUSE.—Bills introduced: To prohibit the appointment of Congressional committees to attend funerals; and to prohibit the draping of public buildings in mourning, except by order of the President; granting pensions to postal railway clerks who have become aged or disabled in the service; granting the franking privilege to inmates of soldiers' homes; authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest on the bonded debt of the United States, and to provide for special deposits of the public money; for the free coinage of silver; to enable the people to name their own postmasters; fixing the salary of Civil Service Commissioners at $5,000; for the admission into the Union of Dakota, Montana, Washington and New Mexico. An attempt to pass a school board bill for the District was opposed by filibustering until 5 p. m., when the House adjourned.

CITIZENS of Washington have subscribed a fund of $50,000 to insure payment of prizes and expenditures for the National Drill and Encampment. The drill will be held the last week in May, 1887.

THE health of the population of Owen county is good, and all of the doctors want to go to the legislature.

SENATOR SHERMAN wants sugar put on the free list, which, according to the theory of some of those who want the war tariff continued, classes the Senator as a free trader. Have you discovered any of the northern industries that Mr. Sherman is willing to have put on the free list along with sugar which in this country is produced only in the South.

[illegible], candidate for State Treasurer, was in town last Saturday. He thinks he has the argument with which to puncture Uncle Dick Tate's sails and let the wind therefrom. If claiming everybody both in and out of sight will elect him South will be the next State Treasurer by a large majority, but he may yet find out that Uncle Dick is loaded.

MR. MORRISON has decided to call up the tariff bill in the House the latter part of next week. Tariff reformers in the House are confident now that they will be able to get the matter up for consideration, and many believe that there will be tariff legislation of some sort this session. They are prepared to make a hard fight and take advantage of every circumstance in their favor.

THE new revenue law is becoming more popular as its results develop. Many persons who have been failing to list their property in full and at its value have been compelled by it to make correct assessments and millions of dollars which heretofore have escaped taxation are forced upon the tax list and will now share its burden of taxation. The revenue law in this State has needed remodeling for a long time.

ONE of the members of the Board of County Commissioners who was a Justice of the Peace for several years remarked Monday that he had no idea that the Commissioners would be such a great improvement over the Court of Claims as originally constituted. A large number of claims were passed upon, and without the "dilly-dallying" that characterized the old court. At no time was more than one subject under consideration.

THE Louisville jail now contains quite a novelty in the shape of mankind—a genuine hermit. His cave home is in Edmunson county, this State, in a wild and inaccessible part thereof, and he is "Pig Jack," the hermit. He received the first name from the fact that he herds his drove of swine in the same cave with himself, of which he is very fond. He is also very fond of moonshine whisky, which he makes himself and for which he was arrested. The officers had a hard time catching him.

THE Register, Senator Harris' home paper, discovering that his position regarding the new revenue law is not calculated to be any benefit to him in his canvass for Governor, is now endeavoring to modify his opposition to that law by saying that "he believes that the revenue law has many good features, but in some particulars is radically imperfect and should be corrected as soon as possible." When Senator Harris first contemplated becoming a candidate it was understood that he denounced the law from "eend to eend," but the argus-eyed Register sees the necessity of toning down his original opposition to the law, and inserting in his platform a half-and-half plank.

THE Electoral Count Bill, as passed by the House, directs that Electors of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January following appointment, the electoral vote of each State to be properly certified and sent to the Secretary of State at Washington, and the Senate and House shall meet in the hall of the House on the second Wednesday in February succeeding the meeting of the electors to count the vote, the result of which to be delivered to the President of the Senate, "who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and together with a list of votes be entered on the journals of the two houses." The mode of procedure relative to more than one return from any State, objections, &c., is lengthy, but said to be sure to meet the ends of just decisions.

IN his bill Mr. Thobe charges that at the Congressional election there were but seven Republican officers of election in this entire county. From this assertion it may be inferred that the County Court in its appointment of election officers failed or refused to appoint other than Democratic judges for some of the precincts. The records of that Court show that at every precinct in the county except Beaver one Republican and one Democratic judge of election was appointed, and these appointments were made long before Mr. Thobe was heard of as a candidate for Congress, and therefore the appointments could not have been made to prejudice his race.

As to the charge that there were but seven Republican officers of election in this county, the poll-books on their face show that there were fourteen acting at the election of which Mr. Thobe complains.

Mr. Thobe's attorney comes down to Boone and remains but a few hours, and returns home and charges fraud in every precinct in the county except one. Don't he know that if there had been any frauds committed in the districts charged with fraud, that the Republican officers in those districts whould have notified the world at once, and if there were frauds committed and these officers sanctioned them, why does he complain because there were not more Republican officers of election. The truth is there were Republican officers of election at every precinct in the county, except two, and Mr. Thobe got every vote cast or offered to be cast for him in Boone county, and the charge of fraud as applies to Boone county is utterly false. There were irregularities in the polling of the votes at some and probably all the voting places, but there is a vast difference between a fraud and an irregularity and if Mr. Thobe's attorneys don't know the difference it is time that they be posting themselves.

Mr. Thobe's contest is nothing more nor less than a sore-head crusade against Carlisle, manipulated by some disappointed office-seekers of Covington and Newport, and backed by an element of jealousy which pervades that same locality.

The working men of Covington and Newport are not the instigators and prosecutors of the schem to attempt to lower Carlisle's standard in this county, but it is those who appeared to worship him previous to that which they were attempting to capture by great professed friendship went another way.

THE Court of Appeals has affirmed the decision of the Montgomery Circuit Court in the Cornelison case. It will be remembered that Cornelison in 1884, assaulted Judge Richard Reed, of the Superior Court, in the office of the latter, at Mount Sterling, and cow-hided him, and a short time thereafter, so great was his humiliation, Reed suicided. Cornelison was indicted for an assult with intent to wound and kill. Upon the trial he was found guilty, and sentenced to three years in the county jail and to pay a fine of one cent. An appeal to the Superior Court was had, and the special judges reversed the judgment of the lower court. The cause was then taken to the Court of appeals with the above result. It is now go to jail or jump the State.

The New Revenue Law.

One or two cases which have attracted our attention, go to show the great need there was for a thorough revision of our revenue laws and the good effects which must result from a proper enforcement of what seems to be known as the "Hewitt Bill." No one will contend that this bill is perfect, but none will deny that it is a vast improvement upon the old law as contained in chapter 92, of the General Statutes. Nor will we attempt to show the many changes made in said bill as it came from the Auditor's hands.

The cases to which we refer are not imaginary, but real ones; and to these we invite the reader's notice.

Two neighbors have for years listed for taxation a house and lot each at precisely the same value, namely: two thousand dollars upon which they have, of course, paid the same amount of taxes, which, for 1886, at the present rate of taxation, (51 cents on each $100) is $10.20.

[illegible] the operations of the new law the one finds himself, in addition to his house and lot, the possessor of $30,000 in cash, upon which he will now pay $150.10, making taxes $161.40 instead of $10.20 as heretofore.

Now the injustice to tax-payer No. 2 arising from the failure (possibly oversight?) of his neighbor tax-payer No. 1 in neglecting to list with the Assessor the $30,000 under the equalization law, must be obvious to all.

For instance, the aggregate of taxes heretofore paid by the two neighbors has been $20.40. To raise this amount upon the entire joint property as at present assessed would require just 6 cents on each $100, and the taxes of No. 1 would be $19.20, and that of No. 2 would be only $1.20.

In other words, No. 2 has been paying each year $9, which should have been paid by No. 1 in order that each should have borne a fair and equal proportion of the public burden.

The kicker against the Hewitt bill in this case will, doubtless be No. 1, who will, in his most persuasive manner, try to convince No. 2 that this law is most infamous and insults the honest (?) tax-payer by requiring him to make oath to the schedule which he has signed, and, by way of emphasis, will remark, "the word of an honest man needs no oath to confirm it."

The second case to which we will call attention as illustrating the evils and inequalities growing out of the old system of assessments, and which it is hoped and believed the Hewitt bill will correct and regulate, is that of a gentleman who has been heard to say that his income was $25,000 per annum, yet looking over the Assessor's book of the county in which he lives, we find that the whole amount of property assessed in the name of this party amounts to considerably less than $40,000.

A man might, on an investment of $30,000, realize $25,000, or even more in some lucky speculation, but when we speak of income we mean something fixed and certain: not dependant upon the rise or fall in stock, bonds or produce.

Now suppose this man's capital he has invested $100,000 in Government bonds upon which Congress has kindly provided no taxes are to be collected, and $100,000 in bank stock (upon which tax is paid by the banks), and $200,000 in cash or cash notes. In such a case he should pay tax on $240,000 instead of $40,000, and his taxes instead of $204 would be $1,224.

Now suppose this man has twenty neighbors, who have each a farm or house and lot worth $3,000, but have no cash loaned at interest, and well secured by mortgage. These twenty men will each pay to the State $15.30 as taxes, or in the aggregate $305. Or in other words, the State derives 50 per cent. more revenue from the $60,000 assessed against the twenty citizens than upon the $240,000 owned by the one. We should, possibly, have said presumed to be owned, but contend that the presumption is a fair and reasonable one.

Here we have another illustration of the burden of taxation, resting with many times double weight, upon the shoulders of the poor man.

We don't interpret the Scriptural injunction, "bear ye one another's burdens," to mean that twenty men shall "club together" to bear the burden of one; but, rather, that the bearing shall be reciprocal.

Doubtless under the new law the burden will, at least, be more equally distributed.

Let us wait and see.—Frankfort Argus.

IT is said that Mr. Thobe, the labor (?) candidate, has employed counsel to contest the seat of Mr. Carlisle in the next Congress. So it turns out that Mr. Thobe is more of a politician than laboring man at last, and a very corrupt politician at that. He knows, if he knows anything, that he did not receive a majority of the votes cast in the district at the late election, and he knows that if a full vote had been polled he would have been snowed under a 10,000 majority. If Mr. Thobe was what he claims to be—a representative of honest labor, and an advocate of Democratic principles—he would be the last man to do what he has done in the matter. The truth of the matter is Mr. Thobe is a tool in the hands of the Republican leaders and Democratic sore heads in Covington. He received the Republican vote—black and white in Covington and Newport. His managers were Republicans and sent his tickets and secret circulars to known Republican leaders here and elsewhere in the district, just on the eve of the election to keep Democrats from knowing that Mr. Carlisle had opposition. No, no, Mr. Thobe the foot-prints of Radicalism is too plainly marked upon you and your canvass to make believe you are a "plain honest workingman."—Milton Press.

THE State Auditor's report for Kentucky shows that the 1885 crop of tobacco was (in round numbers) 28,000,000 lbs. more than the 1884 crop, 99,236,000 lbs. than 1883, and 96,000,000 lbs. more than 1882. It will be seen by this how production has been galloping ahead of consumption.

What a strange sort of man is Larkin F. Sanders, Esq. At the last term of Circuit Court he was fined $190 for shooting one Frank Thompson, under great provocation. He seems to have made little or no effort to procure a remission from the Governor, and no attempt whatever to pay the pay the fine. The result was that the Sheriff in accordance with law had to incarcerate him. This was done on last Friday night and he remains in duress vile. Being a man of much intelligence and of great experience in legal and business affairs, he exhibits a weakness in this matter which is as sad as it is incomprehensible.—Warsaw Independent.

It is not necessary to build palaces to rent. Small cottages that could be rented at reasonable prices would be profitable investments.

Mr. Sleet, father of Owen Sleet, was tried before Judge Cram Saturday evening charged with having turned the prisoners out of jail last week, and was held to bail in the sum of $300. He told several parties in town before the trial that he had made keys and let the prisoners out. Some thought that he was crazy as it was generally thought that no one after having done such a thing would then convict himself. Certain parties we understand are in possession of certain facts that will go to prove that Mr Sleet did turn the prisoners out as above stated, and such information has gone before the Grand Jury. The members of Boone Division No. 115, Sons of Temperance, have met to pay their tribute of respect to their deceased sister, Susie M. Lyon, who, after a lingering illness, died December 4, 1886, in her 25th year, at her home in Petersburg, Boone county, Kentucky, and to bear testimony of her worth as a member of said Division, they offer the following resolution: Be it therefore

Resolved, That in the death of our dear sister we are called upon to mourn the loss of an upright, conscientious member, and one of unusual skill and ability in the performance of all tasks imposed upon her.

Her unblemished character; her sweet disposition; her fearless discharge of all public duty, and her devotion to the temperance cause, have endeared her in the memory of Boone Division, as well as to all others who knew her, and now that she is dead, be it

Resolved, That the heart-felt sympathy of Boone Division is hereby tendered the bereaved family, and that her mother has lost in her a kind and loving daughter, who was ever want to cheer her on in moments of despondency.

GEORGETOWN LETTER.

Georgetown, Ky., Dec. [illegible] 1886.

here two classes of people. The one, the old slave holders, the white population, still possesses all the land and other property, a people taught from childhood that it was menial and unbecoming a white person to labor. The other an equal number of ignorant and dependent people, who, now feeling their legal equality, and in no way superior to the whites, determined among themselves to work no longer. So having no possessions to start with they had either to be supported by the whites or starve. The state of affairs here was not unlike that at Rome immediately after her conquest of the world. The Knights and nobles owning the land had to support the rest of the population, thus having thousands of useless, lazy, good-for-nothing rabble around them and dependent upon them. Such being the state of affairs is it surprising that Georgetown is a dead city? I think not. On the part of the whites, one or two more generations will have passed away before old time customs and traditions will be forgotten; and on the part of the colored element it will not be until it is sufficiently educated and enlightened to know the true requirements of citizenship that the present apathy and trouble will be entirely removed.

The negroes of Boone contrast very favorably with those here, in numbers as well as otherwise. There are in Georgetown several hundred more negroes than whites and they are everlastingly on the streets; they collect on the corners, especially on the sunny sides and oftimes one has to walk out in the middle of the street to pass them. They are sauciness and impudence personified. They are the meanest, ugliest and most uncivilized looking people imaginable. On looking at them one can scarcely doubt their near kinship to the ape.

Court day is an occasion of considerable importance here. It is the trading day, the market day, the business day of Scott county. The crowded streets the large droves of mules, sheep, and other stock, a score of auctioneers raising their almost deafening voices in every quarter, present quite a contrast to the quiet court days in Burlington.

The court-house is an admirable structure, having all the county office rooms on the lower floor, a large, elegant circuit court room on the second floor and the town clock on the cupola. In this regard Scott is a model for Boone. That dilapidated old building is really a disgrace to the very prosperous county it represents.

Our county is well represented in Georgetown: Hon. J. B. Finnell, one of the ablest lawyers and most influential citizens in this county, is a native of Boone, being born and reared near Verona. Mr. John B. Graves, another Boone man owns the finest residence in the town and is recognized as the wealthiest persons in the county. His possessions are variously estimated at from a quarter of a million to a million dollars.

Big Spring in the outskirts of the town is the only natural curiosity of which Georgetown can boast. There breaks out unexpectedly under a large projecting ledge of rock a stream of water about ten feet wide and four feet deep. The water is clear, cold and wholesome as spring water anywhere. Weather produces little change in its flow. It is the sole reliance of the town in time of water famine. With its water the streets are sprinkled and flouring mills are run.

Last, but not by any means least, there are two institutions of learning located here. One a male, the other a female. R. M. Dudley D. D., is president of Georgetown college. This is an institution of which Kentucky might well be proud. With an excellent corps of professors—ten in number, the institution is prepared to furnish young men an advanced knowledge of Latin, Greek, German and French, in addition to all that is usually included in a purely English course. The number of students here at present is about 120. The institution is one of the oldest in South and West and before the war, in her "palmiest days," flocked to her doors from every Southern State. Since then, however, though the course of the institution has been none the less good, other institutions have sprung up and Georgetown's number has necessarily been fewer.

The literary societies connected with the college, the Ciceronian and the Tau Theta Kappa are said to be among the finest in the land. The halls are tastefully decorated, and with their capacious libraries can but be objects of admiration. Boone has five representatives in this college at present: Messrs Courtney and Hubert Walton, of Petersburg. B. A. Terrill and W. W. Gaines, of Bullittsville, and B. I. Johnson, of Verona.

Georgetown Female Seminary is under the control of J. J. Rucker, a name no doubt familiar to Kentuckians. The number of ladies who attend school there now is about 100, half of whom are day scholars. Misses Bettie Gaines and Mary Corn, of Bullittsville, are the only ladies from Boone. These two institutions, it is said, are the life of Georgetown. They are indeed the life in one sense of the word for almost all the disturbance and commotion is occasioned by the students.

Norsnim.

Very, very few persons attended the meeting of the Board of Commissioners Monday. About the usual number of claims were allowed, and every thing passed off quietly and in a business like manner.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

Mrs. John Balfour, of Chicago, is reported to have inherited [illegible] by the death of an old sweetheart who took to [illegible] instead of to drink after her rejection. It is unnecessary to add [illegible] the information that the lady is handsome and charming.

The book-hunter comes upon a valuable book, occasionally, even in India. A short time ago the books belonging to General Douglas H. A. were sold by auction, and a well-preserved copy of "Hippocrates' Prescriptions," 300 years old, was bought for 30 rupees or less than £2. A copy of the same edition was sold not long since in London for £1,200.—N. Y. Post.

They were two freshmen who had just emerged from the literary atmosphere of Russell Library Hall. "Very nice audience." "Yes, and so literary, too." "Very. You are fond of literature I presume?" "Passionately so." "You like Shakespere, then, I dare say?" "Ah! very much. Do you?" "Extremely; and I like Pope, too." "So do I, very much indeed." "He's grand; and I'll tell you another good writer." "Who?" "Milton."—Albany Journal.

A correspondent of the Berlin Tages Zeitung corrects the report that the distinction of being the northernmost editor in the world belongs to the Esquimaux poet, L. Moller, who edits a paper at Godthaab, on the west coast of Greenland, 64 degrees north latitude. There are three papers published at Tromso, a city of only 5,400 inhabitants, 69 degrees 38 minutes north latitude, and one each at Vardo, 70 degrees 22 minutes north latitude, and Hammerfest, 70 degrees 41 minutes north latitude. The latter is really the northernmost city in the world.

—A sheet of ordinary paper warmed in front of a fire, will, in a dark place, give a very decided electric spark upon the application of the knuckle, with a crackling sound. Place a sheet of gold-leaf between two sheets of paper thus electrified and pass a pencil point over them in a zigzag course, and a luminous flash quite strong will appear.—Scientific American.

FENCE.
A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.
Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.
It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

VERMIFUGE
ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at [illegible] throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the [illegible] Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the [illegible] have been manufactured all over the country, but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no [illegible] worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When [illegible] and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.
Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.
Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of Fahnestock is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. Fahnestock, and be satisfied with nothing else.
New Franklin, Howard Co., Mo.
Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.
Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.
Cambridge, Md.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] Indian Bureau. Out of an estimated Indian population of [illegible] enrolled during the year, the average attendance is about [illegible] Indians and there has been a general improvement in their [illegible] condition. The [illegible] reservation, in the Indian Territory, furnishes a striking illustration of the improvement. [illegible] Commissioner says:

"There has been an [illegible] in cultivation [illegible] by Indians, who have [illegible] modes of farming. They have [illegible] a marked [illegible] have hauled over [illegible] at their children in the [illegible] the 'squaw man' [illegible] more readily married to these Indian [illegible] conformity to the requirements [illegible] decent."

The report says that, while the work of elevating the race is bearing fruit, there must be radical changes in our Indian policy before they can be incorporated into our political and social system. In this connection the Secretary recommends passage of the bill for the appointment of a commission to inspect and report on Indian affairs, which is now before Congress. During the year about [illegible] Indians have received [illegible] land allotments, and [illegible] couples have taken up homesteads. Congress is asked to pass a general law regulating the allotment in severalty of lands to Indians. The Secretary also recommends that the Army Appropriation act be modified so that army officers may purchase grain, hay and other produce from Indians near the posts. The Secretary considers it desirable that a law be enacted authorizing Indians to pasture cattle on their reservations at a reasonable compensation for the benefit of the tribe.

Of the Indian Territory the Secretary says:

"It is certainly of the greatest importance, and no less for the interest of the Indians themselves than for the people of the adjoining States, that this vast area of country should have extended over it, as early as may be practicable, the universal laws of the land, and its large population and immense property interests is brought under the influence and operation of those laws as administered by the judicial establishment of our country, so that lawlessness may be punished and peace and good order preserved through and by the courts of justice, and not by the agency of the executive departments, aided by the military force of the Government."

Secretary Lamar recommends that the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be increased from $4,000 to $5,000 per year. The expenses of the Indian Bureau for the fiscal year were $6,195,751.

The total area of public lands disposed of during the year was 24,614,419 acres, for which $9,381,084 was received. The Secretary renews his recommendation that the minimum price for sales of land at private cash entry be increased, in order to prevent the increase of large tracts in the hands of a few individuals. He also recommends the establishment of a date after which claims founded on alleged Mexican land grants be barred from presentation. The recommendations contained in the last report, that the desert-land laws be modified and the Timber-Culture act be repealed, are renewed. Legislation for husbanding the timber resources of the country is urged. Considerable space is given to the unlawful inclosure of public lands by cattlemen. The Secretary says in this connection:

"Whatever appliances, however, the law has placed in the hands of the Executive will here after be invoked, if necessary, to put a final end to this enormous plundering of the public domain."

In the matter of pensions the report says there are now 3,710 cases upon the docket of the Board of Appeals, and he recommends the continuance of the extra appropriation for this board until the arrears are brought up.

During the year there were 38,594 applications for patents and reissues received, and 24,184 were granted.

The reports to the Bureau of Labor show that the reports of industrial depressions are largely exaggerated. The report says:

"Among the various causes alleged by manufacturers and others for the existence of industrial depressions are to be found the irregularities existing in the rates of duty under present tariff legislation. * * * These glaring inequalities are a potent cause of apprehension in the minds of producers, of disturbance in values, and, therefore, of corresponding depressions."

Continuing, the report says:

"The adjustment of rates of duty on manufactured goods should be in accordance with the labor cost of production, etc. * * * The labor cost in production and all the other elements of production must be considered before an equitable schedule can be arranged. Until some such basis is adopted the inequalities shown * * * will exist, although they may be shifted so far as products are concerned."

The operations of the geological survey are considered and its work approved. From it is learned that the value of metallic products of the United States during 1885 was $181,589,365, of which $64,712,400 were pig iron, $51,600,000 silver and $31,801,000 gold.

The development of the Territories during the year has been impeded by the Apache raids in Arizona and New Mexico, by Chinese labor troubles in the Northwest and by Mormon troubles in Utah and Idaho.

In presenting the report of the Utah Commission the Secretary indorses their recommendation. The bill now pending in the House, as it was amended by the Senate and by the Judiciary Committee of the House, furnishes a comprehensive plan for the treatment of public affairs in Utah, and they urge its passage at the approaching session. They also recommend legislation forbidding the immigration into the United States of aliens who are polygamists, and they favor the adoption of the constitutional amendment proposed by the Judiciary committees of the two houses of Congress.

The Secretary concludes his report by recommending liberal appropriations for the Yellowstone Park, and that every measure calculated to preserve and improve the park, prevent spoliation of timber, or game, or any other encroachments, be adopted and enforced.

THE TREASURY.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The United States Treasurer has submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury his annual report, from which it appears that the net receipts of the Government during the year ended June 30 were $336,439,727, and the net expenditures $242,483,138. The excess of revenue over expenditure was $93,956,589. The net receipts for the last fiscal year over those of 1885 are $12,492,817. The receipts on account of the Post-office Department, not included in the above statement, amounted to $52,997,135, an increase of $5,687,309 over those of the preceding year; the expenditures increased from $50,320,314 in 1885 to $50,682,585 in 1886, or $356,271. Bonds of the United States amounting to $44,531,350 were redeemed and applied to the sinking fund.

Of bonds held in trust for National banks $61,042,400 were withdrawn, of which amount $56,925,300 was held to secure circulation, and $4,117,100 was held as security for deposits of public moneys. The bonds deposited to replace those withdrawn on account of circulation amounted to $20,754,900, and on account of deposits to $1,170,000, a total decrease of $34,117,500. The total movement of bonds held for National banks was $87,967,300.

Worn and mutilated United States notes amounting to $63,000,001 were redeemed during the year. The issue of silver certificates was $4,800,000 and $28,523,971 were redeemed. Gold certificates amounting to $10,188,895 were redeemed.

The unavailable funds of the treasury June 30, 1886, were $29,521,807, a decrease of $8,946 from last year. The balance in the treasury at the close of the year ended September 30, 1886, was $100,055,775, an increase over that of 1885 of $16,815,-[illegible]. The available balance was $72,913,141, against $59,989,191 last year, an increase of $12,930,949. The Treasurer suggests that the large sums held by mints and assay offices be placed in the actual custody of the treasury, and the duties of the mint officers be confined to the assaying and coinage of the bullion placed in their charge.

On the subject of [illegible] the present [illegible] the Treasurer says:

[illegible]

The total amount of United States notes outstanding is [illegible]. The amount of silver certificates actually outstanding at the close of the fiscal year was $115,977,675, of which amount the treasury held $27,861,450, leaving $88,116,225 in actual circulation, a decrease of $4,114,[illegible] during the year. This amount has since been added to by the demands of business, so that the amount in circulation November 30 was $105,519,817. There is now in circulation $61,[illegible] in silver dollars. Discussing the question of silver coinage, the Treasurer says he thinks that $60,000,000 is the extreme limit of circulation which may be obtained. It certainly can not be maintained at that sum when the new silver $1 and $2 certificates are in full supply, and a return to the treasury of one half of the amount of standard dollars now in circulation must be looked for.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of the Secretary of War, furnished for publication to-day, shows that the expenditures of the department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886, were $39,941,[illegible] divided as follows: Salaries and contingent expenses, $1,[illegible]; military establishment, including transportation, $24,279,501; public works, $8,394,305; miscellaneous, $4,406,627. A surplus of $1,208,016 remained unexpended. The appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1887, are $[illegible], and the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1888, are $48,268,835. The army at the date of the last consolidated return consisted of 2,168 officers and 23,940 enlisted men. There are ten regiments of cavalry, five of artillery and twenty-five of infantry. Of Indian scouts there are 505, and 2,081 enlisted men are on detached service with recruiting parties, etc.

The report gives in detail the changes and operations of the different divisions. The Indians are generally quiet, although the presence of troops is necessary to preserve peace and to prevent, especially in the Oklahoma country, the seizure of the land by settlers and its invasion and occupancy by herders of cattle. The Secretary says:

"There seems to be little hope of improving this condition of things, in view of the avidity with which this fertile country is coveted by the settlers and the cattlemen, and the duty resting upon the Government to keep its agreements with the Indians for whose benefit it has been set apart. Congress alone can give the needed remedy, and in the interest of good government it is earnestly hoped by all who have executive duties to perform in this Territory that speedy action will be taken."

A large portion of the report is given up to a graphic account of the operations against Geronimo and his band, and their final incarceration in Florida, the leading features of which have been published heretofore.

The Secretary recommends that the retired list be increased so as to include all officers permanently incapacitated for active service. He also concurs in the opinion of the Lieutenant-General that the army be increased 5,000 men.

In discussing the report of the Engineer Bureau Secretary Endicott again calls attention to the utterly defenseless condition of our sea coast and lake frontier. He urges that appropriations should be made and work begun at once to fortify the principal seaboard cities against attacks by water.

During the year the Springfield armory manufactured 39,527 rifles, carbines and shot-guns, besides repairing arms and manufacturing swords and miscellaneous articles. The Secretary expresses a hope that Congress, during its present session, will place the army on an equal footing with the navy in the matter of the manufacture of guns, and urges that the bill, which has already passed the Senate, to establish a gun foundry at the Frankfort arsenal, be taken up and passed by the House.

In conclusion, the report recommends the appointment of an assistant Secretary of War and that the salaries of the principal officers in the Secretary's office be increased.

THE SUNDAY LAW.

Its Strict Enforcement in Indianapolis and New York—No Business Done or Work Performed, Except by Police Officials.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 6.—It was impossible to buy any thing in this city yesterday. The Liquor League had 100 "spotters" keeping watch over all places of business, and, in consequence, there was nothing done that would warrant a prosecution for violation of the Sunday law. Strangers who arrived in the city were compelled to go to their hotels on foot, as hack-drivers dared not convey them.

NEW YORK, Dec. 6.—An attempt to put the "blue laws" in force was made yesterday, with varying success. Many arrests were made, but, in spite of the vigilance of the police, any one wanting to buy almost any article could do so, especially on the East side. The violations of the law were not open.

Overzealous officers succeeded for a time in stopping the laborers in the street-cleaning department and the snow-plows of the horse-car companies, but their interference was soon checked by a general order from the superintendent of police. In the evening Miss Anna Eva Fay, a London spiritualist, with a company of mediums, tried to give an illustrated lecture at the Academy of Music, but she was prevented by the police.

Under a Cloud.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—The arrest of Henry Schwartz, a brakeman of the Rock Island road, Saturday on a charge of bigamy recalls the brutal murder of Kellogg Nichols, the express messenger. Schwartz, who was one of the brakemen on the train last March when Nichols was murdered, has been closely shadowed ever since, and is known since the tragedy occurred to have spent in Philadelphia and Chicago $2,000 in fifty-dollar bills. He refuses to account for the possession of such a large sum of money.

Heavy Failure in the Shoe Trade.

BOSTON, Dec. 6.—Business circles in this city were Saturday startled by the failure of the boot and shoe house of A. P. Martin & Co., who stood at the head of the trade in New England. Within the past three years a business of $3,000,000 has been done at a loss, owing to the demands of the workmen. The liabilities are over $200,000. Four factories will be closed. General Martin was a prominent figure in the battle of Gettysburg, and lately held the office of mayor.

Three Persons Drowned.

WHITEHALL, N. Y., Dec. 6.—Oliver Allen, son of Lighthouse-Keeper Allen, at Dresden, on Lake Champlain, six miles north of here, went skating Saturday afternoon, and while pushing a cutter occupied by two children, aged twelve and five years, attempted to cross the lake at a place called Maple Bend. The ice gave way, and all three were drowned.

To Be Appealed.

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 6.—The attorneys for the Government in the Bell telephone case held a consultation at Judge Thurman's residence. On hearing the formal decree throwing the case out of the United States Court in Ohio Tuesday, the Government's counsel will take the case directly to the Supreme Court.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The Annual Report of Attorney General Garland.

Giving a Detailed Statement of the Business of the Department of Justice Done During the Last Fiscal Year.

ATTORNEY GARLAND'S REPORT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of Attorney General Garland contains a detailed statement of the business of the Department of Justice during the last fiscal year, together with statement of claims against the United States. During the year [illegible] suits aggregating in amount $[illegible] have been brought under the [illegible] of the Court of Claims. The total number of such cases pending is [illegible]. Under the Bowman act [illegible] have been transmitted to the [illegible] committees of Congress. There are now pending 1,110 cases, the amounts involved being $[illegible]. Under the same act twenty-eight claims to the amount of $[illegible] have been transmitted by the heads of departments. Of these nine cases, [illegible] are still pending. In addition to the above there have been filed under the French Spoliation act [illegible] cases, amounting to $[illegible].

It is stated that not more cases will be filed and the annual increase to about $15,000,000. During the year [illegible] suits, involving claims for $1,[illegible], were brought to trial. In [illegible] suits, claiming $[illegible], judgment was for claimants for $[illegible]. During the year 1,370 civil suits, to which the United States was a party, were terminated in the Circuit and District courts of the United States. The number pending July 1 was 2,[illegible]. The number of criminal prosecutions terminated during the year was 14,[illegible], about one-half of which were for violations of internal revenue laws. The aggregate amount of judgments rendered in favor of the United States in civil suits was $[illegible]. The amount actually collected was $[illegible]. The amount of fines, forfeitures and penalties imposed in criminal prosecutions during the year was $567,531. Civil suits to which the United States was not a party, numbering 12,330, were terminated during the year in United States Circuit and District courts.

The Attorney General urges the importance of legislation on the following matters, the necessity for which was pointed out in his last annual report: Fees for marshals in Territories, pay of deputy marshals, revision of the fee bill, substitution of fiscal for calendar year, chief supervisors of elections, protection to civil officers and witness fees of witnesses and jurors in Territories and reorganization of the jury system in the District of Columbia.

He devotes a chapter to the subject of United States prisoners and the general question of convict labor, and advocates the building of a Government penitentiary and reformatory at an early date. He recommends the appointment of a commission to inquire into the matter. He also urges the necessity of United States jails and mentions Atlanta, Ga., and Louisville, Ky., as cities where such buildings are much needed. The number of United States prisoners in custody June 30, 1886, was 59,250.

The Attorney General calls attention to the unsatisfactory condition of revenue litigation in the Southern district of New York, and commends the suggestion of the Solicitor of the Treasurer for the appointment of an additional judge for the exclusive trial of revenue cases in that district. Supplementary legislation, respecting the restoration of court records is strongly urged as necessary for the preservation of records of great value. It is impossible, the Attorney General says, to overestimate the necessity that exists for a change in the judicial system to meet the constantly increasing business of the country and he urges that something be done to remedy the evils complained of on all sides.

Mr. Switzer, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in his annual report says the foreign commerce of the last fiscal year, when compared with that of the fiscal year 1884-5, discloses few marked changes. The following are the most important: There has been a decline of $82,664,925 in the value of the exports of merchandise and an increase of $57,908,807 in the value of the imports of merchandise. Notwithstanding this decline in the value of exports and the increase in the value of imports, our exports of merchandise have exceeded the value of the imports, the former being $679,224,830 and the latter $635,436,136, thus showing an excess of exports over imports of $44,088,-694.

There was an increase of $34,474,299 in the exports of gold and a decline of $5,948,-347 in the imports thereof, the excess of the exports over the imports of gold amounting to $22,208,842, as against an excess of imports over exports amounting to $18,213,864 during the fiscal year 1885. The inward and outward movement of silver was about the same as during the preceding fiscal year, the excess of exports being $11,660,-912, as against an excess of exports of $17,-203,006 during the preceding fiscal year. The small decline during the last fiscal year is a hopeful indication that the trade depression of the past four years has reached its lowest point, and that we are on the eve of a period of increased commercial activity and national prosperity. This is further indicated by the trade returns of the first three months of the current fiscal year, which exhibit gratifying results.

Arrested for Wife Murder.

PORTLAND, Mich., Dec. 8.—The morning of November 20, Mrs. Myron Collins was found dead in her bedroom with a bullet in her heart. The coroner's jury decided it to be a case of suicide. Her husband, who was the only person in the house at the time of the shooting, says he was sitting with his back to the bedroom when the shot was fired. Mrs. Collins was in Portland the day previous and took her little niece to stay all night, telling her, it is said, that Collins had threatened her life, and she was afraid to be alone. The niece says Collins and his wife quarreled during the night about money matters, and that in the morning, just before the shooting, the niece was sent out of the house, and while absent heard the shot and a voice exclaiming: "O, Myron!" Collins was arrested, charged with having murdered his wife.

—A Buckingham (Eng.) farmer presented his first-born for christening at his parish church with twenty-six Christian names from the Scripture, and representing every letter in the alphabet. The names commenced with Abel and ended with Zachariah. It was only with the greatest difficulty that the clergyman persuaded the farmer to content himself with the first and last of the appellations proposed. The surname of the infant is Jenkins.

—A little Swedish girl, walking with her father on a starry night, was so attracted by the brilliancy of the sky, all lit up with twinkling stars from one end to the other, that she seemed to be quite lost in her thinking. Her father asked her what she was thinking of so intently. Her answer: "I was just thinking that if the wrong side of Heaven is so glorious, what must the right side be!"

—Maud—"Mr. Allround is a sort of universal genius, isn't he?" Mabel—"Yes, he is exceedingly clever." Maud—"He is something of a lawyer and something of a musician. What is his profession?" Mabel—"Well, the lawyers call him a musician and the musicians call him a lawyer!"

—"Madame," he began, as he lifted his hat at the front door, "I am soliciting for home charities. We have hundreds of poor ragged and rude children like those at your gate, and our object is"—— "Sir, those are my own children," and the front door was violently slammed to.—N. Y. Telegram.

A BROAD DISTINCTION.

The English Reform of the Civil Service as Compared with That of the United States.

The absurd and dishonest manner in which Mr. Blaine, following the correspondent of the New York Tribune, has tried to misrepresent the purpose and nature of the investigation into the English civil service has had one good effect. It has called attention to the essential features of the reformed service both in England and in this country, and has led to better understanding of the differences between the two, and especially of the practical nature of our own system. The changes that have been brought about in the two countries have had some things in common, but they have also varied with the causes that produced them. In both cases the principle of admission by open competition and subsequent probation was adopted, but in England the evil to be remedied was favoritism, partly based on the preferences of aristocratic families and partly springing from the use of offices to purchase votes in Parliament, while in this country the evil was chiefly partisan favoritism combined with a certain amount of chicanery on the part of the distributors of patronage. The difficulties in which the English system is involved do not arise at all from the competitive principle, though there have been mistakes in its application, but largely from the aristocratic bias that has survived the reform and which has tended to form a sort of hierarchy in the service. This in turn has been rendered more inflexible and unmanageable by the system of pensions dependent chiefly on length of service which is still a fixed part of the English plan. These elements have combined to make the English service bureaucratic, with the incidents of red tape, timidity, rigidity and lack of "go" natural to bureaucracy.

On the other hand, the difficulties to which the reformed portion of our service is exposed—and it must be remembered that it is still a very small portion—are of quite another character. They spring from the innate tendency of the American mind in any occupation to depend upon its own resources, to neglect system and strict order, and to depend on ingenuity, energy and decision to meet emergencies as they arise. The American system requires, therefore, precisely the opposite treatment to the English. It needs clear and uniform rules, firmly and fairly enforced, with constant and vigilant supervision and the greatest consistency in the application of the rules. There is no danger of bureaucracy here. The men employed in public work do not tend that way; the source of regulation, namely, the legislation of Congress, is too variable to permit it, and finally the American people would not suffer it in a service over which they have ultimate, though indirect, control. The common terms used by the two races indicate the wide difference in their temper in these matters. The Englishman "growls," the American "kicks," and the office-holders with us are always so intimately connected with the general public, are so much part of it, and in sympathy with it, that there is no probability, and hardly a possibility, of their becoming a "class" apart. Moreover, the qualities our officers have shown, even under the depraved and demoralizing influence of the spoils system can, under proper regulation, be made extremely valuable, and this without the slightest danger of their usurping privileges not belonging to them, or assuming an offensive bearing.

This needs, as we have said, a more perfect and harmonious system, with fair and uniform rules carefully applied by means of adequate inspection and authoritative central control. It is noteworthy that the course of the Civil-Service Commission has been steadily in this direction, and more markedly so since the Administration of Mr. Cleveland came in than at any time before. The present commission has steadily advanced in its grasp of the duties imposed upon it and the powers conferred by the law. It has extended its investigations, kept closer watch on the examinations, guarded more jealously its own rights, both of initiative and of judgment on appeal, and has striven to inspire the whole body of officers with whom it deals with a common understanding of and a common respect for the vital principles of the reform.—*N. DISGRACEFUL CONDUCT.

A Newspaper Organ Twists the President's Kindly Tribute to the Memory of His Predecessor in Office Into an Unconscious Indorsement of the Republican Party.

The warm expressions of esteem and admiration for the late President Arthur which have appeared in Democratic and Republican newspapers alike, or have fallen from the lips of preachers and statesmen, without regard to politics, testify to the broad, generous, kindly spirit that fills the American heart in the presence of death. There is not a public man around whose bier words might not be dropped or memories evoked that would jar on the hearts of the mourners. There is not even a personal friend or relative at whose death some unpleasant reminiscence might not be recalled from the past. But, by common consent, all such unpleasant thoughts are banished on the day of mourning, and only the virtues and noble qualities of the deceased are remembered. When General Grant died and from every Democratic paper throughout the land came the most touching and beautiful tributes, when the Nation was in mourning and the South seemed to be as deeply affected as the North, did any of those papers recall the days of reconstruction and the saturnalia of peculation in Washington during the Presidential Administrations of the great soldier? No; they spoke only of that part of his career that will shine with undiminished luster on the pages of history, when the Shepherds, Belknaps, Babcocks and Robesons will be forgotten.

In the same manner the many grand and ennobling traits of President Arthur's character have been put forward in bold relief, as they deserved, and no allusions were made to any political episodes which might disturb the harmony of grief. It remained for the New York Tribune, a paper to whose blind, stupid partisanship nothing is sacred, to profane the occasion of the funeral of President Arthur, and desecrate the sanctity of the especial day of mourning, by a fling at President Cleveland and the Democratic party over the remains of the lamented Republican leader. It would seem as if the term "ghoulish glee" was particularly adapted to this case. The eloquent tribute paid by President Cleveland to the memory of the deceased in his admirable proclamation is eagerly seized by the ghoulish Tribune for the purpose of partisan capital. It seeks to distort the expression "he performed the duties of his office with dignity and ability," so as to make a certificate of character for the Republican party in general and to cloak the rascalities of Republican officials for years past. It has the hardihood to say the following:

But is not this the truth, what were President Cleveland's supporters telling when they asserted, in 1884, that the public service was honeycombed with fraud and rotten from end to end? Were they telling the truth when they declared that President Arthur suffered the Government to be robbed by Secretary Chandler in the conduct of the Navy Department, and by Secretary Teller in the conduct of the Interior Department? Were they [illegible] that the Treasury Department was [illegible] for the benefit of [illegible]

According to the Tribune's code of ethics, an expression of esteem for the dead is permissible without being attended with a [illegible] statement of the shortcomings of every one officially connected with the person in whose memory the expression is uttered. Following this theory it would have been necessary for a President of England, on the occasion of the death of General Grant, to have qualified his remarks by allusions to the carpet-bag governments of the South during the days of reconstruction, to Babcock, Belknap and Robeson, to the Credit Mobilier and District of Columbia frauds, and other subjects of like unpleasant nature. What would the American people have thought of the application of the Tribune's theory? Such a despicable attempt on the part of the Tribune to whitewash the rascals of its party at the grave of an illustrious citizen must cause a feeling of distrust and contempt in the breast of every American. What President Cleveland's supporters asserted in 1884 has been found not only true, but only a faint estimate of the real condition of affairs. The opening of the books has opened the eyes of the American people to the shameless character of Republican government. The books showed that when the present Administration went into power there were nearly [illegible] deficiencies due the Government under Republican rule, that millions were squandered in the Navy Department without giving the country a navy, that the public domain was wasted on corporations and favorites, that the treasury was being drained by all sorts of rascals, from deputy marshals to colossal rings, and that the Pension Office was made an electioneering bureau. The shameful story has been told before in these columns how the public service, under Republican administration, was honeycombed with fraud and rotten from end to end.

But because President Cleveland paid a graceful tribute to the memory of his immediate predecessor, the Tribune would have it that he testified to the purity of the entire Republican party. What must the friends of President Arthur, and, indeed, all fair-minded people, think of this exhibition of "ghoulish glee" on the part of Mr. Blaine's organ? Perhaps the Tribune forgets the savage and brutal attacks it made on the dead President at the time of the Garfield tragedy, when it classed him with Guiteau. The American people do not forget them. It may endeavor to use the kindly words of President Cleveland to remove some of the tattoo marks from its "perpetual candidate for the Presidency," since it has distorted them to exonerate Chandler, Teller and other Republican ex-officials from the charges proved against them. We shall see.—Albany Argus.

INGRATITUDE PERSONIFIED.

Stone, the Ex-District Attorney of Pennsylvania, Is the Man—Foully Abusing an Administration Which Sheltered Him Too Long.

There is no Democrat in the country who will not thank President Cleveland for the stand he has taken in the case of William A. Stone, United States District Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania. It will be recalled to mind that Stone was suspended for making campaign speeches in Pennsylvania in the month of October and that not many days since he applied to the Attorney General for restoration to office on the ground that his political work did not interfere with the discharge of his official duties. If Stone had a particle of manhood in his composition he would have scorned a suggestion that he ask an Administration he had savagely attacked for a favor of any kind. No man in the State of Pennsylvania resorted to more dastardly means to cripple the Administration than Stone, who is noted for his venom and malice, and yet he had the impudence to beg of the Attorney-General that he be restored to the office which he lowered by his political action. What depth a man must be sunk to who after maligning an Administration which puts bread and butter in his mouth, has the audacity to ask it to restore him to an office he has forfeited? An Administration to be strong and effective for good must be surrounded by men who are in active sympathy with it and not by fellows who leave nothing undone to poison the public mind against it. This must be plain to any unprejudiced person, and it is gratifying to know that the President recognizes it most plainly. The hypocritical Republican papers may howl as they will over the emphatic refusal to restore Stone to office, but they will convince nobody that injustice was done in the slightest degree. It would be impossible to imagine any thing more damaging to an Administration than hordes of Federal officers throughout the country, denouncing it most bitterly and resorting to the vilest falsehoods to strengthen their argument. Sure and certain defeat would overtake such Administration, no matter how beneficial its policy might be to the whole country. It seems that charges were made against Stone a year and a half ago because of his offensive partisanship, but he was allowed to remain under the impression that he would refrain from pursuing such a course as would wantonly offend and irritate the friends of the Administration, who insisted that he be retained in office. If he had been ousted then, as he ought to have been, there would be no whining appeals from him now. But he is out now, and it is to be hoped that he may be followed by hundreds of other Republicans whose tongues heap abuse on an Administration which has shown them too much leniency.—Buffalo Times.

——The intimation that Mr. Blaine is "managing" or can manage the political labor movement in this city, or in Boston, is equally belittling and unjust to the earnest and independent men who are its inspiration. The George movement was thought out and well under way before Mr. Blaine heard of it, and if similar projects shall be organized in other cities it will be done by and for the dissatisfied workingmen, and not in the interest of the Maine demagogue. No doubt he sees in the movement a possible advantage to himself and his party, but he can not influence it for that purpose.—N. Y. World.

——Blaine organs are so active in searching out reasons why American shipbuilders should not compete for contracts for naval vessels that the skeptical might conclude they would rather let the work go to foreign labor than have a Democratic Administration earn the credit of giving remunerative employment to American skill and energy. Their hearts beat warmly for the American workman, but their souls' eyes are set upon the will-o'-the-wisp of the success of Blaine as a Republican candidate in 1888.—N. Y. Star.

——Brother Blaine, it appears, wants to flirt with John Sherman's friends.—Atlanta Constitution.

—France revels in a diminutive gunboat, which has been flying experimentally near Toulon, cutting through the water at the rate of nineteen knots, with a gun out of all proportion in size. The inventor's proud boast is that the boat is too small for big ships to tackle, while its cannon is big enough to smash things.

"Petroleum: Its Source and Production." This title indicates to some extent the character and scope of the new Holiday Annual for 1887, by "A Man," which is now in press and will be ready on or about the 15th inst., for delivery by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway. It is to all intents and purposes a gift to the friends and patrons of that road. The subject is ably handled, and discussed in a [illegible] colloquial vein that will captivate adults and youth alike, although especially dedicated to the Boys and Girls of America. It embodies a vast amount of scientific and practical information, is profusely illustrated with diagrams, sketches and full page engravings from original drawings true to fact and nature, with beautiful and striking design on outside cover, printed in colors. It is a book that will challenge wide attention and comment—something choice, elegant and valuable, that will pay to read, study, discuss and preserve—and the Company have spared no expense to produce it in finest of [illegible] style. TIRED OUT!

At this season nearly every one needs to use some sort of tonic. IRON enters into almost every physician's prescription for those who need building up.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS —THE BEST TONIC

For Weakness, Lassitude, Lack of Energy, etc., it HAS NO EQUAL, and is the only Iron medicine that is not injurious. It Enriches the Blood, Invigorates the System, Restores Appetite, Aids Digestion. It does not blacken or injure the teeth, cause headache or produce constipation—other Iron medicines do.

JNO. VAN VECHTEN, M. D., New London, Ohio, says: "I have prescribed Brown's Iron Bitters with most satisfactory results in cases of Debility where a tonic is needed, and I know of no preparation of iron that does better."

MRS. MARY SWEENEY, 1625 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky., says: "I had lost all appetite and was entirely broken down in health. I was greatly benefited by Brown's Iron Bitters and gladly recommend it."

MRS. NANCY COATES, Jeffersonville, Ind., says: "I was troubled with weakness and a general breaking down of the system. I used Brown's Iron Bitters with the most satisfactory results."

Genuine has above Trade Mark and crossed red lines on wrapper. Take no other. Made only by BROWN CHEMICAL CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

Suffering Womanhood.

Too much effort can not be made to bring to the attention of suffering womanhood the great value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the diseases of women. Such an one is the wife of General Barringer, of Winston, N. C., and we quote from the General's letter as follows: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham: Please allow me to add my testimony to the most excellent medicinal qualities of your Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Barringer was treated for several years for what the physician called Leucorrhœa and Prolapsus Uteri combined. I sent her to Richmond, Va., where she remained for six months under the treatment of an eminent Physician without any permanent benefit. She was induced to try your medicine and after a reasonable time commenced to improve and is now able to attend to her business and considers herself fully relieved." [General Barringer is the proprietor of the American Hotel, Winston, N. C., and is widely known.]

Pains and Aches

In various parts of the body, more particularly in the back, shoulders and joints, are the unwelcome indications that rheumatism has gained a foot-hold, and you are "in for it" for a longer or shorter period. Rheumatism is caused by lactic acid in the blood, and is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which eradicates every impurity from the blood, and fills it with richness and health.

"I had been troubled for some time with poor appetite, particularly in the morning, and also had frequent attacks of rheumatism. I commenced taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now my appetite is the best and the rheumatism has entirely left me." C. ARENS, 306 Emerald Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

"My wife has been troubled with rheumatism for a long time, and her blood has been very poor. Last spring she had scrofula sores. I got her some of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and on taking it she began to improve right away. She is not in the least troubled by rheumatism now, and the sores are all healed." HENRY RANSOM, Mt. Vernon, O.

NO MIDNIGHT MASS.

A Great Christmas Event Prohibited in New Orleans.

Archbishop Leray Gives His Reasons for Its Abolishment.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 20.—Archbishop Leray has issued a circular order to all the Catholic clergy of this diocese, prohibiting the celebration of midnight mass on Christmas. In this city, as in all other Catholic towns, this celebration is one of the great events of the Christmas holidays, and the churches are crowded with tens of thousands of people, many of them Protestants and Hebrews [illegible] from homes where they have been drinking egg nog, or from other festivities, where they have been at libations. There has always been some disturbance to mar the solemnity of the mass. Last Christmas Eve this reached a positive scandal. Some [illegible] placed crabs in the font of holy water at the Cathedral, surreptitiously turned some fowls, ducks, etc., in the church and exploded fire crackers among the congregation, to their great alarm. The Archbishop announces that he is compelled, to the great regret of all good Catholics, to give up the celebration in consequence. In fact, the midnight mass has been made an occasion of dissipation and scandal.

A WOMAN'S CONFESSION

Of a Murder She Helped Commit in West Virginia Years Ago.

Massillon, O., Dec. 20.—Lizzie Barry, who has for more than a year been an inmate of Ann Peiffer's house of ill repute in this city, has confessed to her landlady that she participated in the brutal murder of Fred Watkins at Volcano, a village near Parkersburg, W. Va., several years ago. She says her associates in the crime were the wife of Watkins and a farm-hand. Her story is that they killed him, threw the body in a cistern, and removed it from there several days afterward to the grove where it was found in a decomposed condition by the Barry girl and a neighbor woman, the latter having been led to the spot while hunting dandelions. The facts of the murder having been committed and the girl having lived there were substantiated to-day through telegraphic correspondence with the chief of police at Parkersburg.

Horrible Hydrophobia.

St. Louis, Dec. 20.—The death from hydrophobia of the daughter of Louis Grund, ex-chairman of the Republican City Central Committee, and prominent quarrymen and contractor, was reported to the coroner to-day. Barbara Elizabeth Grund, sixteen years old, some time ago was playing with a young puppy, only two months old, when it bit her. The wound was not serious, and as the dog, so far as known, had never been out of the house since the day of its birth and had never been with other dogs, nothing was thought of it. About eight days ago, however, the young lady began to show symptoms of the dread disease, and two physicians were called in. Their efforts to relieve her suffering were of no avail, and she rapidly grew worse until yesterday, when she died in the greatest agony.

POLYGAMY DOOMED.

One Mormon Bishop Departs With His Legal Wife, Leaving Three Families Behind.

Ogden, Utah, Dec. 19.—The Utah problem appears to be slowly approaching a solution, and the indications point toward the gradual collapse of the institution of polygamy. Last spring Lester Herrick, a wealthy bishop in the church, owning a large amount of real estate, and residing in this city, suddenly went West on a trip to the coast. Spring and summer passed, but Bishop Herrick still tarried, and as he had four wives it began to be suspected that, not having "the fear of the Lord" before him and greatly dreading the U. S. Marshal, he had taken to the "underground." Recently the Bishop returned to Ogden and at once made preparations for the removal of his legal wife and his household goods to California. A very short sojourn in Ogden sufficed to complete his arrangements, and he has now departed for his new home, leaving behind him three separate families for whom, however, he has liberally provided. Those in the church profess to believe that Herrick will return to his old home when things are more settled, but the facts have become known that he has left his property in the hands of an agent to be disposed of; that a sale of one city lot has recently been effected, and that the gentleman has become the owner of an estate in Southern California. There is no doubt that Bishop Herrick has permanently left Utah and the Church, and that if any deception has been practiced the Church is the subject of it. Bishop Herrick was well liked by his Gentile fellow-citizens and possessed their confidence; he is a man of more than average ability, shrewd and honorable in his dealings. It was a daughter of Bishop Herrick whom members of his own church endeavored to compromise with Judge Powers, in order that the Judge's character might be blackened; but the plan reacted upon the head of one of their witnesses, who was convicted of perjury and is now serving out a five-years' sentence. The lady has since been happily married to a Gentile. Another Bishop in Salt Lake City, John Sharp, who is also superintendent of the Utah Central railway, declined about a year ago to "live" his religion, on the occasion of his having to plead to an indictment charging unlawful cohabitation. "Guilty," said Mr. Sharp, "and I promise to obey the law in future and to urge others to do likewise," whereupon sentence was suspended, and so was Bishop Sharp from his bishopric in the Mormon Church. A few more such examples as these and the crumbling edifice will totter to its fall. The hiding away of John Taylor to escape trial under indictment, and the bail-jumping of George Q. Cannon, first and second Presidents of the Church respectively, are causing much unfavorable comment among the more intelligent Mormons.

AGED 136.

A Colored Woman Said to Have Been Born in 1750, Dies in Indian Territory.

St. Louis, Dec. 19.—A letter from Sasakawa, Seminole Nation, Indian Territory, gives an account of the death there on the 5th inst. of Mrs. Susanna Warren, perhaps the oldest person in the United States, if not in the world. She was born in the old town of St. Augustine, Fla., in 1750, fifteen years before the Americans conceived the idea of national independence. She was born a slave and was the property of Spanish masters until 1818, when she with other Spanish slaves fled from the town of Pensacola when it was taken by General Jackson. She lived in the Seminole country from then until the second treaty of peace with the Seminoles, when she was regarded as their common property and was removed with them to the Indian Territory.

This morning the body of Miss Stump was taken from the ruins burned beyond recognition.

WHAT WILL PRINTERS DO?

A Type-Setting Machine That Is a Success.

One Man Can Do as Much Work With It as Ten the Old Way.

Washington, Dec. 17.—The first book printed by type set by the new type machine, owned by parties in this city, has just made its appearance in the market. The company was organized a year or more ago but has been a year getting ready to manufacture the machines in considerable quantities. They had first to make the tools with which to make the machines. Now that this is done they can begin to turn them out by the hundred. One lot of over a hundred machines is now being made. They will cost somewhere from $350 to $500 apiece, but will enable one man to do the work of ten in type setting. They work like a type writer, only that they can be worked at a higher rate of speed. The operators on the machines now being used can produce type at the rate of sixty words a minute, and with increased experience they expect to get a considerably higher rate. This means, the friends of the machine say, that from three to six men will be able to set up the type for the ordinary daily paper. The machine casts the type a line at a time, and when the paper is printed the type are melted down and the metal used again the next day. There has been in the past twenty years a wonderful increase in the facilities for producing newspapers with great rapidity in every department except type setting. In this department the old systems have continued to prevail until now, but if this machine does what is claimed for it it will prove a wonderful time saver in this particular and enable the publisher to lay the news smoking hot before his readers within a few minutes after the actual occurrence which it describes.

NATURAL GAS EXPLOSION.

About Thirty People at Kokomo More or Less Burned—How the Insidious Material Caught Fire.

Kokomo, Ind., Dec. 17.—An explosion of natural gas occurred at Well No. 2 of the Kokomo Natural Gas and Oil Company about 3:30 p. m., from which thirty-five men had a narrow escape from death. The well had drilled into the sand last night and shut down. Work commenced this morning to drill deeper, the volume of gas increasing all the time. Notwithstanding the warning to keep out of the inclosure it was filled with spectators. The drill had been withdrawn, followed by a terrible gush of gas which ignited, exploding with terrific force, setting fire to the derrick. How any one escaped alive is miraculous. About thirty were more or less burned, the following being the most serious; Adolphus Picket, Hon. J. N. Loop, Ira Lines, Geo. Stewart, John Daly, Milo Mandlin, Walter Hockett, Marion Price, Blake Ream, Fred George, Dave Frazee, John Brown, Mr. Ulsser, Mr. Hawkins and Lou Leeds, most of whom are badly burned about the face and heads. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by fire in a forge within the inclosure, which was thought to be out. The machinery and derricks are burning. The gas is now burning from the well with a force to show it to be a great producer.

WITH SWORDS.

Genuine Duel in a Chicago Park—Both the Participants Wounded—Every Thing a Mystery.

Chicago, Dec. 16.—A duel with swords was fought this morning in Humboldt Park. A little before seven o'clock two closed carriages entered the park through the south entrance. Each carriage contained a principal with his second and a surgeon. They were driven to the western end of the park where they alighted and concealed themselves behind a clump of trees. The arrangement being completed the principals each drew a shining saber and the contest began. Soon both were wounded. One received a sword thrust through the breast and his opponent was cut across the face and will probably bear the scar for some time. With this drawing of blood the duelists seemed to be satisfied, for they quickly got into their carriages, which were rapidly driven to the nearest drug store. There the wounds were dressed, and the duelists, again in the carriages, were rapidly driven out of sight. Circumstances point to the editor of a pharmaceutical journal and a young medical student as the principals. It is said the cause of the affair was a dispute as to the hand of a young lady. A policeman was a distant spectator of the fight, but was too dumfounded to attempt an interference. The druggist declined absolutely to refer to the subject.

A THOROUGH SECRETARY.

The Head of the Navy Department is [illegible] Laying the Foundation for One of the Finest Navies in the World.

The practical manner in which the Secretary of the Navy is setting about the work of building up the navy and restoring to the country the prestige it once enjoyed in that line gives assurance of success. The wretched mismanagement of that department under Republican Administrations, and the culpable inefficiency in the performance of duty which characterized those Administrations form a chapter in the history of our Government that reflects indelible disgrace on those responsible for the decline of the navy. Favored contractors, worthless ships and enormous expenditures were the principal features of Republican control of the Navy Department. When Mr. Whitney assumed charge he found himself in a position of exceeding embarrassment, his predecessor having not only awarded the contracts for three steel cruisers and a dispatch boat to a favored contractor, but having, in defiance of law, advanced large sums of the reservations to the contractor before the work was completed. The entire set of vessels designed under the Chandler regime have disappointed the expectations of those who naturally thought they would possess the most essential features of the modern cruiser, speed and strength. Admiral Porter declares that he has no faith in those heirlooms of the Chandler Administration, as their lack of speed places them at a serious disadvantage with the ships of other nations. We shall have to rely upon more efficient vessels for the new navy, and to this end Mr. Whitney's efforts are being directed.

He proposes to secure the best attainable models for the new ships, with the highest rate of speed consistent with offensive and defensive requirements. He adopts a broad, sensible policy to gain his point, seeking to avail himself of the best naval skill obtainable. There will be none of the hasty, reckless, inconsiderate methods that governed the former Administration of the department. Mr. Whitney prefers to move slowly and cautiously so as to do his work thoroughly. The new ships will, undoubtedly, represent the latest and choicest improvements in naval architecture and a higher rate of speed than those designed under the Chandler regime. Admiral Porter speaks of three classes of vessels for the new navy, the first represented by a vessel of between six and seven thousand tons and able to make, for a few hours, a speed of nineteen and a half knots. He is of opinion that a vessel is not fit to be considered as a cruiser nowadays that has not a speed of at least eighteen and a half knots. For the new vessels the best of armament is needed, as they are intended to be the peers of any afloat. Very satisfactory progress has been made in this direction during the past year, as the report of the Chief of Ordnance shows. It is no easy task to construct and finish the high power steel guns necessary for modern ships of war, especially as we have had so little real or efficient work done in the ordnance line until the building of the new navy commenced. With new ships and new guns of the best patterns, the United States will once more regain the prestige it held in the war of 1812, when the pride of England was humbled, and during the rebellion, when the achievements of the Monitor caused a revolution in naval building all over the world. We have the finest material in the world in our sailors and marines and the training of our naval officers is second to none. With a capable, efficient, honest head to the department and liberal appropriations by Congress, all the elements necessary to make our navy a source of pride instead of shame are combined, and the result can not but be eminently satisfactory.—Albany Argus.

THE "HARMONIOUS" PARTY.

Facts to Be Explained by Those Republicans Who Claim That the Democracy Only Is Split by Factions.

A recent attempt of Hon. William E. Chandler to restore harmony throughout the length and breadth of the Republican party is likely to end in failure. He published a card some time ago in which he pronounced "baseless" a statement made by the chairman of the National Republican Committee, Mr. B. F. Jones, at the close of the campaign of 1884, to the effect that President Arthur and his Cabinet had shown a want of fidelity and zeal in the Blaine canvass. After thus in a sufficiently explicit way calling Mr. Jones a liar, Mr. Chandler proceeded to deprecate, in a beautiful passage, the tendency among the leaders of his party to indulge in personal quarrels. He thought Mr. Blaine acted "from sudden impulse" when he declined Mr. Edmunds' hand at the Arthur funeral, and "thereby widened a breach which, like that with Mr. Conkling, ought never to have existed." Then, holding behind him the club with which he had just hit Mr. Jones over the head, Mr. Chandler continued: "While our great Republican leaders quarrel, the party suffers, and by reason of such differences loses a Presidential election. It is for the interest of the country that such purely personal controversies should not arise or continue between prominent leaders of either party."

Mr. Jones appears to have been more deeply impressed with the club than the olive-branch portion of Mr. Chandler's letter, for in an interview which is published he says that his statement of 1884 was not "baseless," but entirely true, and then makes these pointed and decidedly unfriendly personal allusions to Mr. Chandler:

> So far as Mr. Chandler's reference to me personally is concerned I do not feel called upon to defend myself. I have no taste for, nor do I see any present occasion for a discussion as to political methods with one whose plans and proposals during the brief intercourse I had with him in the campaign of 1884 were not such as to commend him to those having the success of the Republican party at heart. His criticisms at that time of men then the most prominent in the party, do not seem to me quite consistent with his present expressions of regret in regard to bad feeling between public men. I would not like to feel called upon to make public the facts upon which my opinion of Mr. Chandler is based.

If Mr. Jones' opinion of Mr. Chandler is any thing like that which the intelligent public has long held of him, it would be interesting to see it set forth with ample specifications. Mr. Chandler should let party harmony look out for itself long enough to call upon Mr. Jones for a bill of particulars.—N. Y. Post.

——Mark this! The foolish refusal of that genteelly proffered hand, at the Arthur funeral, will cost Mr. Blaine all of New England save the State of Maine.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

OUR MEPHISTOPHELES.

How President Arthur Came Finally to Suspect James G. Blaine.

The remarkable story said to have been related by the late President Arthur to Judge Draper and Chairman Warren, during the Blaine campaign of 1881, and given to the public for the first time in the New York Times, is pronounced authentic by Judge Draper. Although the main facts in the case were known at the time of the Senatorial fight in 1881, yet the plain unvarnished account given by Mr. Arthur throws new light on a crisis from which may be dated the downfall of the Republican party. It will be remarked that the late President related the particulars of the quarrel between Conkling and Garfield in order to emphasize his advice to the two Stalwart leaders not to mislead their followers in supporting Blaine's candidacy by pledges which previous experience in half-breed honor taught him would not be fulfilled, should Blaine be elected.

The hand of President Garfield's Secretary of State is plainly discernible in the cunningly devised plot to deceive Conkling and Grant, and the New York Senator felt that behind Garfield stood the Half-Breed Mephistopheles, directing the plot which culminated in the nomination of Judge Robertson. Arthur did not know Blaine and his powers of deception as well as Conkling did and he relied, as he says, implicitly on the assurances of Garfield. When Mephistopheles became the nominee of the party in 1884, the Republican President, while loyal to his party and prepared to acquiesce in the decision of the National convention, considered it his duty to warn the Stalwart leaders against being deceived as he was four years previously. His words are emphatic on the subject: "Let me say to you, as a friend, assume no responsibility for the future course of Mr. Blaine's administration in this State. Allow none of our friends to be deceived with false hopes." He bore a lively remembrance of the words of President Garfield to Conkling, Platt and himself the Sunday previous to the appointment of Judge Robertson to the collectorship: "I am not prepared yet to take any action on New York matters and shall not be for some time."

He also considered that the ruling spirit of Garfield's Administration had become the choice of the Republican National convention, and that the influence which operated against himself and his friends on a former occasion had lost none of its malignity. The loyalty of the late President to his party would not permit him to counsel any dissatisfaction in the ranks. But he knew that Blaine was not to be trusted and he was impelled to warn his friends against the Mephistopheles of the party. Time has not improved the situation or changed the feelings of some of the Republican leaders towards Mr. Blaine. They know him to be a trickster, and his "magnetism" to consist of his remarkable powers of deception.—Albany Argus.

Democrats Still Serene.

The Democratic party is not going to the dogs as rapidly as the Republican press would have it. There have been isolated instances of the defeat of a few eminent party leaders, from causes purely local, and there has been a net loss in the House, but there are prospects of a relative gain in the Senate. As to the popular suffrage, the Republicans would seem to be dodging the issue. The net majorities or pluralities for Republicans over Democrats and vice-versa given in 1884 on President, and in 1886 on head of the State tickets are given below, for the purpose of comparison:

	1886.		1884.
	Rep.	Dem.	Rep.	Dem.
Connecticut	....	2,543	....	1,274
Delaware	....	13,637	....	3,923
Indiana	8,319	....	....	6,512
Kansas	28,909	....	64,274	....
Massachusetts	9,110	....	24,373	....
Michigan	8,433	....	3,344	....
Missouri	....	50,635	....	33,059
Ohio	11,781	....	31,802	....
Pennsylvania	42,851	....	80,290	....
Wisconsin	18,718	....	14,680	....
	128,121	66,815	218,771	44,768
Net. Rep. maj	61,306	....	174,003	....

This shows a net Democratic gain of 122,697 in ten States on the popular vote in an Administration off-year. The Republican party is moving grandly on to a popular majority.—Detroit Free Press.

Can not some Republican organ make these suggestions the pretext for shouting that "the South is again in the saddle" or something to like effect?—Detroit Free Press.

We have before us a table showing the number of votes to which Thobe claims he is entitled in this county under the election held last month. He not only claims that he is entitled to the number of votes set out in his table, but charges that they were cast for him, thus imputing to as good and reliable men, both Democrats and Republicans, as Boone county affords, the offense of changing the vote of the several precincts by throwing out ballots cast for him and substituting the ballots of his opponent. This is a grave charge to be laid at the door of as good and pure men as can be found in the county, and if ever the opportunity offers, Thobe and his coadjutors will receive from this county a severe censure for the false and slanderous accusations they have made against Boone in their greed for office.

Thobe received 36 votes in this county which is every vote that was cast for him and he can not force the public into believing otherwise. No action of the officers of the election changed a vote for or against Thobe either before or after the ballot was cast, and the irregularities complained of in nowise effect the will of the voter, and the election as held in Boone county on the 2d of last November was as clear of fraud as any election ever held in the county, Thobe's statement to the contrary notwithstanding.

Below we give Thobe's table of the vote of this county as he has the audacity to claim it was cast, and we ask the officers of the election, and the remainder of the citizens of the county, to ponder upon it a few minutes, and then say if they believe that a man who attempts to force his election as Thobe is doing, or one who aids and encourages him in it, are worthy of confidence. Boone county's vote as cast in Covington or Newport by Thobe and his friends is as follows:

	Thobe	Carlisle
Burlington	39	65
Florence	15	46
Walton	17	42
Verona	35	49
Beaver Lick	16	27
Union	15	42
Hamilton	18	38
Carlton	17	41
Bellevue	11	13
Petersburg	23	66
Bullittsville	10	46
Taylorport	9	14

Carlisle's majority 264.

Now then, compare the above table with the following, which is the official vote of this county, and see how Thobe and his manages propose to tamper with the will of the people as expressed at the polls:

	Carlisle	Thobe
Burlington	61	9
Florence	54	5
Beaver Lick	34	0
Hamilton	48	8
Bellevue	17	0
Taylorport	16	0

The first statement is sworn to as a whole by Thobe, doubtless; although he could have found others in his city that would swear to it or anything else calculated to annoy Carlisle. The second table is certified by precincts by the officers of elections, while the result in the county is certified by the Sheriff, County Clerk and County Judge. Now who is entitled to the credit of making a correct compilation of the Boone county vote, Thobe in Covington or the officers who held the election? It is a question easily answered. For a man who has the name of being an honest laborer, Mr. Thobe's position as regards the election in Boone county naturally creates in the minds of our people a doubt, and a very reasonable one at that.

In the Burlington district Thobe claims that there were 39 votes cast for him, being three more than were cast for him in the entire county. At that district he claims that Carlisle received four more votes than the official vote gives him, which shows that, in Thobe's opinion, the officers of election at Burlington were nothing more than a miserable set of corrupt bunglers. At Burlington the officers were all Democrats except M. S. Rice, all alike honest, conscientious men, and it behoves aspiring men like Thobe to know whereof they speak when imputing fraud and collusion to them. At several of the districts in the county Thobe received no votes, but he can not bear the idea of being "whitewashed," and now proposes to inject a few fraudlnent votes, the largest number he proposed to inject being in Verona at which place he proposes to raise his vote from 0 to 35. Thobe has just as good grounds to claim that he carried the county of Boone as he has for claiming that 225 were cast for him. If there ~~were 189 votes~~ cast for Thobe that were not counted ~~for him~~ there were 1,000. This is the first time, to our knowledge, that an attempt was ever made to change the vote in Boone county to a result contrary to that shown by the returns. The irregularities in the polling of the vote wronged neither of the candidates out of a single vote, and the unsuccessful candidate can not show wherein he was prejudiced in the least thereby. Thobe will ultimately discover that he has allowed some persons to make a fool of him, and that his contest is prompted by spite, and that the fraud of which he now complains never existed.

Since the above was put in type, we have received strictly reliable information, that Jesse T. Williams, one of the judges of election at Beaver, being the judge who received the ballots from the voters and deposited them in the box, is a true-blue Republican. At Beaver it will be noticed Thobe claims he received 16 votes instead of 0.

We do not attempt to justify or defend the irregularities in the holding of the election: but we do emphatically denounce the charge of fraud against this county as maliciously and unqualifiedly false.

"The Boone County Recorder speaks thusly:

'The Democratic party in this State stands in need of a candidate for Governor who is abreast of the times—who knows how to concentrate his ability on a policy that will encourage the development of the natural resources of the State, and place her on the highway to prosperity, and last but by no means least, a man whose recommendations as Chief Magistrate of Kentucky will inspire the confidence of the legislature. It is not every man who wants to be Governor that fills the bill.

"This is rather a severe and unjust reflection upon the distinguised citizens who have declared themselves candidates for the Governorship. In ability, long experience, thorough acquaintance with the embarrassment of Kentucky politics, and patriotic desire to retrieve Kentucky's long lost name, as a powerful and influential Commonwealth, no better and more excellent gentlemen could be before the people than those announced." Owen Democrat.

The Democrat is too hasty in its conclusions. If the candidates now announced "fill the bill," which the Democrat thinks they do, the RECORDER has cast no reflection, whatever on them. It is a conceded fact that Kentucky has arrived at a period that demands, as Governor, a Statesman who can remove the clogs from the wheels of progress, and formulate a policy that will arouse her from her present lethargy. The RECORDER welcomes any evidence that conduces to show that the candidates for Governor are of that material.

IN an article refuting the charge that there is Democratic opposition to the administration, the Commonwealth says:

"We are clear in the opinion that the dissatisfaction in the Democratic party with regard to the policy of the President is mainly confined to Congressmen, and that the people object to their action and not to the course of the President.

"We can speak with confidence as to the feeling in this (the Sixth) Kentucky district. During the late canvass the Civil Service question cut no figure. Not one word was uttered against the President's policy. The objections were to the Democratic candidate—his views on the tariff question, his opposition to Federal aid to common education, and his unsatisfactory Federal appointments for the district. On these issues alone the majority for the Democratic candidate was largely cut down."

"We can speak with confidence" and say that the reasons that the Commonwealth assigns for the reduction of Carlisle's majority had nothing to do with the falling off of his majority in this county, although the Commonwealth is now laboring as hard to make the people believe that these are facts, as it labored a few months ago to make the people believe that Carlisle was the greatest man in the government, and Carlisle's position on the public issues are the same now as then.

THE Indiana legislature being so close is sure to breed considerable corruption. On the face of the returns the Democrats have a majority of two on joint ballot, and to overcome this majority the Republicans will attempt to unseat two members of the lower House to enable them to elect a United States Senator. The Senate is Democratic and to checkmate the Republican move in the House, it is charged the Senate will refuse to meet with the House in joint ballot to elect a United States Senator. Lots of fun ahead over there.

GEN. BUCKNER at one time thought he could be nominated for Governor without leaving his home in Hart county. At that time he considered the tide in his favor so strong that no one would have the temerity to oppose him, but the General will discover that it will be necessary for him to air himself pretty extensively between now and the convention, as a very formidable opposition has lately made its appearance and is growing in strength day by day.

IN some of the counties where candidates for the legislature are announced there are Beck and anti-Beck candidates, making the election of United States Senator the principal issue. There are many other questions with which representatives should deal that are of vastly more importance to the State than the choice of a U. S. Senator, but the important issues are generally the ones that are shunned.

THERE was evidently a considerably reduction of the tobacco crop in this county last year, and it will be followed by a much larger reduction in 1887. There is now very little talk about that particular crop and the business of preparing tobacco land for the coming season appears to have been abandoned this winter. It took the producers some time to learn that they had reached the stopping point.

MORRISON'S tariff bill was downed in the lower House of Congress Saturday by a vote 149 to 154, a gain of five votes in its favor since last session. Six Republicans voted in favor of considering the bill and twenty-six Democrats voted against it. Morrison gained two votes in Massachusetts, three in New York and one in Maryland, and lost one in New York.

THE Bourbon Agricultural society has treated Col. Craddock of the Kentuckian in a very shameful manner. It ran a printing bill with him to the extent of $600, and under the plea of being hard pressed, begged time, and when he finally had to sue, the statute of limitation defeated the bill. Very commendable proceeding for a high toned society indeed.

WITH Gen. Buckner and Judge Hines on the track for Governor the confederate soldiers vote will be divided, and one of Gen. Buckner's strongest props will be very greatly impaired, the probability being that the greater portion of that element will go to Hines, who is said to be a man of more modern ideas than Buckner.

THE Grayson Gazette is becoming alarmed for fear that after all the candidates for Governor are announced that "there will not be more than half a dozen of us fellows to hold the convention." STATE NEWS.

The increase in the tobacco crop of Daviess county, this State, has been something wonderful in the past three years. In 1883 the crop amounted to 3,719,175 pounds; in 1884, 5,733,620 pounds, and in 1885, 13,268,480 pounds, an increas of more than 7,500,000 pounds in one year. This, too, when the price was low down.

The cost for printing the blanks on yellow paper for taking the tax list of the State under the new revenue law, was $3,051 20, exclusive of the paper. This could be done for $1,000 were it left to the lowest bidder, and equally as well. This is what is injuring the Democratic party.—Frankfort Argus.

On Thursday last the machinery material, stock, fixtures, furniture, and all the tangible property of every kind and description, of, in, and pertaining to the Yeoman office, including the name and good will of the Kentucky Yeoman newspaper, were sold at public auction by order of court.—Capital.

So far no move has been made here toward the purchase of tobacco in this county though a large crop is in the hands of anxious farmers who desire to sell, but hope for a better price than that indicated at present.—Warsaw Independent.

The tobacco trade still hangs fire. The buyers learned a very valuable lesson by last year's experience and will buy according to the market. Farmers consider the prices too low and are holding back. No sales reported.—Winchester Sun.

The Franklin County Court of Claims has fixed the county levy for 1887 at 40 cents on each $100 of property subject to taxation. This is a reduction of 10 cents on the levy of 1886.—Capital.

Two dogs belonging to a Louisvillian were levied upon by a sheriff to satisfy an execution on a judgment for $450. They were German mastiffs, and appraised at $5,000.

A large crowd assembled in Walton last Wednesday to be present at the examining trial of Houston for shooting McPherson, an account of which these columns contained last week. A party hunting high ground on which to locate a signal service (not civil service) station, have spent a day or two away above the tree tops on the Florence pike near Noah Clare's. The Lawrenceburg Register commences an item by saying, "now winter is staring us in the face." Lord bless your innocence! on this side of the creek, we have passed that proceedings, and on divers occasions within the past forty days has old boreas mutually had us in-his cold embrace. Staring us in the face is an occurrence of the chilly past in "Kaintuck."

A very large crowd attended the sale of the personal property of Eli Carpenter, dec'd., last Thursday. A big dinner was served, and the outer man was kept warm by large log fires in the barn lot. The other evening we discovered that one of our near relatives was growing bald and called his attention to the fact, when he immediately charged that the bald place was only a scar from a dog bite received on the head many years ago; but upon a moments reflection it occurred to him that it is the writer's head that carries the scar from a dog bite instead of his own. We have heard many excuses for baldness, but his was the most perfect failure of them all.

John Palmer, a briddle that will make his horse secure when out in the country Sunday nights.

Jim Westbay, a $5 reward for out running a greyhound, or 50 pounds of well seasoned feathers.

Joe Reed, a toboggan, but he don't want all his lady friends to know it, for fear each will put one on the tree for him, and he will receive a superabundance of that article.

Some time ago an English gentleman found a large turnip in his field of the shape of a man's head, and with the resemblance of the features of a man. Struck with curiosity, he had a cast made of it, and sent the cast to a phrenologist, stating that it was taken from the head of a celebrated professor, and requested an opinion thereon. After sitting in judgment, it was reported that it denoted a man of acute mind and deep research; that he had the organ of quick perception, and also of perseverance, with another that indicated credulity. The opinion was transmitted to the owner of the cast, with a letter requesting, as a favor, that he would send them the head. To this he politely replied that he would willingly do so, but he was prevented, as he and his family had eaten it the day before with their mutton at dinner.

All morning and up the [illegible] a dangerous performance the other day [illegible] Hamilton, trying to lead an [illegible] bull to Burlington [illegible] He piled the animal [illegible] at the end of a long rope [illegible] at the end of a long [illegible] down and [illegible] at bay with the stick. After a long time the procession arrived in Burlington, and the three men were congratulating themselves that death and destruction was no longer following close at their heels. At this juncture a half dozen boys and as many dogs hearing of the procession's approach, came rushing out on the street to welcome the heroes and their captive. The bull did not admire such a demonstration, and with tail in the air and nose rubbing the ground he made another dash for liberty. Blythe's stick broke, Hogan lost his grip on his rope and Huston seeing that the bull had the "exvantage" of him deserted his post, and the crowd that had gathered on the street to welcome the conquering heroes scampered for dear life. The bull went out the Bellevue pike and had complete control of the first two miles of that road the next twelve hours.

Eli Carpenter's heirs were in town yesterday closing up the trade with L. D. Stephens for the farm for which Mr. Carpenter bargained a short time previous to his death.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

VERONA.

The coal famine is about over.

Tobacco is a slow go, and not much of the new crop has been received yet.

Mr. Marshall Whitson and lady have returned from an extensive trip west.

A certain building association of Covington is taking a boom in Verona, several have joined lately.

T. N. Dickerson, C. C. Robetts and W. E. Sleet appraised the estate of J. P. Vest, deceased, last Saturday.

W. T. Carlisle and lady have moved to town much to the gratification of our young people, who love to sing.

T. J. Crowe is nearing the completion of a large blacksmith and wood shop on Main Street, near the depot.

C. L. Griffith has captured an elegant prize, in securing the agency for a new patent fence, everybody takes it.

Kennedy, Hume & Co., have put up a new pair of Fairbank scales near the depot. You can now weigh your coal and hay by the wagon load.

Christmas is coming next, and we are going to have a nice Christmas tree at the M. E. Church on Christmas eve. Our stores are loaded down with every thing nice.

Hodge the 10 year old son of N. S. Hudson, suffers the loss of eye lashes and winkers. He stuck a lighted match in an old powder horn—didn't-know-it-was loaded.

Kennedy & Hume receiver here last Thursday, two car loads of cattle, thirty-two head, their aggregate weight making 59,716 pounds, an average of 1866 lbs. Three of the above cattle were two-year olds and averaged 1892 lbs. Verona is always ahead; who can beat it?

UTZINGER.

There is a good opening here for a shoemaker, and an effort is now being made to get one.

Willis Arnold and family, of Slater, Missouri, have been visiting friends and relatives here. It is refreshing to meet Willis after his absence from us and learn of his success among the western farmers and traders.

We are informed that John Rucker has sold the Alfred Rucker homestead near here to Paschal Rucker of Burlington, and that he will move to it in the spring. This community will gladly welcome "Uncle Pack" and family to this neighborhood. F. P. Walton, the present occupant of the place and clerk in our store, will likely hold forth at the old stand, but where he will roost is not yet known.

We at last have a postoffice at our town and its name is Utzinger. There have been many efforts made to have an office established here that failed. Our success this time is due to the influence of Speaker Carlisle, who kindly took the matter in hand and got us a special office. For the present we will get our mail via. Petersburg. The name of our office will be a riddle to many. The naming was the most difficult task encountered in the whole proceeding. Gainesville is the name of the place, and is very appropriate, but there is already an office in the State by that name. We tried Enterprise, thinking that also very appropriate, but the authorities at Washington saw fit to look over the names of our petitioners and named it Utzinger, for one of them and we are satisfied. A letter addressed to Utzinger, Boone county, Ky., will now find its way here.

BELLEVUE.

Our coal merchants have closed out their stock and could have sold more.

Deputy Assessor Gaines was assessing the property in this district last week.

Corn in this part of the country nearly husked, some farmers are selling at 35 cents delivered.

Born—On the 9th inst., to John H. Humphrey and wife, a daughter. Jno. is not the biggest merchant in McVille.

The game hunters have so thoroughly hunted the game in this neighborhood, that what is left is hardly worth hunting.

About 700 hogs are being fed in Bellevue bottoms this winter, a larger number than has been fed here for several years.

Last Friday evening the teacher in our school gave his scholars a public spelling match, which the young folks enjoyed very much.

John P. Ryle and family have moved in the Moody house. We hear that he has bought a lot in McVille and will build there in the spring.

Quite a [illegible] has taken place in the [illegible] by the [illegible]. The work [illegible] the [illegible] line and [illegible] with a [illegible] than

Since [illegible] was [illegible] here last week, [illegible]. Our weather [illegible] broken [illegible] with heavy rains and snow.

There has been full of ducks the past ten days, which has given our sportsmen [illegible] the shooting. Quite a number of the birds have been killed.

The tobacco buyers in this part of the country have not as yet entered the market, no crop has been sold, or [illegible] that we have heard of. The crop will be short of last year's, with quality about the same.

One of the large chandeliers in the Baptist church fell from its fastening and striking the organ and some of the seats, it reached the floor badly broken. As the evening services had not begun no one was near when it fell. The organ was considerably damaged, and the carpet and several of the seats were saturated with coal oil. The lights were extinguished by the fall, which probably prevented a bad fire.

THE COMBINATION
FENCE.

A fence that is wanted, and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not as liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use; hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.
Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

DOWN THE CHIMNEY.

The Visit of an Unwelcome "Santa-Claus."

A Tale of New York in 1800.

[Original.]

"MARY, the boys and I will have to go down to the village to-morrow morning with the wood, and I don't suppose we'll be able to get back before Wednesday morning, but I guess you won't be afraid to stay here one night alone, will you?"

John Comstock did not look at his little wife as he spoke, but stood with his back toward her, shaking the snow from his old gray hat and coat, for he well knew the shade of disappointment that was passing over her face.

"Why, no, of course I'm not afraid," was the ready reply. "What should I be afraid of, and up here among the mountains in this honest little place?—but it won't seem quite like Christmas eve to-morrow night without you all—and you know it will be the first time we haven't spent it together since we were married," she added, hesitatingly, with a slight tremor in her usually calm voice.

John said nothing, but went to the window and looked out. The storm was beginning to break away. The snow was now falling more gently, and in the East faint luminous streaks of silver gave signs of a perfect moonlight night. He turned with a brighter face, and spoke cheerfully:

"The storm is evidently about over. If no more snow falls the roads will be fair, and if we can get an early start in the morning, I think we can manage to get back home before midnight—at least some time before Santa Claus comes down the chimney," he added, merrily—"but see here, little wife, I almost forgot the good news that I have to tell you. Parson Stanley settled that old account with me to-day—paid me every dollar, and interest besides, and here it is. Now go and put it in some safe place, and take good care of it until I come back. Next spring we'll put a face on this old log house that our neighbors won't recognize. Great guns! I'd like to know where all this cold air comes from!" broke off John, with a sudden change of subject.

"Good evenin'! good evenin'! I thought I'd walk right in without knockin', kind o' neighbor-like, yer know," and the somewhat startled pair looked to see their neighbor, Hiram Otwood, standing in the doorway.

"Jiminy! man, you might as well kill a fellow as to scare him to death," good-naturedly exclaimed the honest host, springing up and placing a chair for his queer guest.

"Do tell! did I skeer yer! I thought I made a great rumpus as I come onto the stoop."

"We were busy talking and didn't hear you. Why, how blue you look! Here, take my chair near the fire, I'm going into the other room for awhile," and the kind-hearted hostess rose as she spoke.

"O no, I'm not a bit cold. Just you keep your seat," he feebly remonstrated, dropping into the proffered chair nevertheless without any ado and spreading his rough, cold hands in the very blaze of the cheerful fire. "I tried to git wife to come over with me for a little chat this evenin', but she was a-gittin' the childern to sleep and couldn't leave," and the wretched fellow's teeth fairly chattered as he tried to keep up a show of conversation.

"I'm real glad that you've come over, Hiram, for I want to ask you to keep an eye on my premises while I'm gone down to the village."

"Jest so! When be you goin'?" was the quick inquiry.

"To-morrow morning, bright and early," replied the other, "and I can't get back until real late to-morrow night."

"Well, I'm goin' down thar myself tomorrow noon, but I'll have Hanner look arter things."

"Is that so?" inquired the astonished John, for a trip to the distant village was not an every-day event among those simple mountain-dwellers.

"Yes, that's so, but if Mrs. Comstock feels at all skeered I'll have Hanner come over and stay all night with her. I saw two or three Injuns a-passin' down the road to-day, and mabbe you'd ruther not be alone, Mrs. Comstock," he said, addressing her as she now appeared.

"Indeed, I'm not the least bit timid," was the spirited reply. "There's not enough life left in one of those poor creatures to frighten a baby."

"You're right. They wouldn't worry a muskeeter. But I must be a-goin' now." And, rising, the awkward visitor drew an old faded scarf from his pocket and enveloped his head and neck in its folds. "Where be the boys to-night?" he suddenly asked.

"Oh, they've been abed an hour. They're going with me in the morning, you know," and poor, tired John tried not to look bored as the fellow still lingered. A few moments later he growled a sort of good-night and took his departure, slamming the door as he went.

"As good and honest a soul as ever lived," said the husband at last, daring to break the silence with a hearty laugh. "You don't suppose he is near enough to hear me, do you? I'm so sorry he's going to be gone to-morrow, for I should feel perfectly easy about you if he were only going to be at home. I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll stop at Mrs. Otwood's in the morning and tell her if any thing happens up here, or if you want her you'll blow the dinner-horn and let her know."

"O, pshaw, John! what is going to happen? You go and get your kindlings ready for the morning, and don't let me hear any more of this nonsense," and she kissed the shade of anxiety off his face and went into the little bedroom adjoining.

Long before sunrise the simple household was astir, a hearty breakfast was eaten, and half an hour later a woman's forlorn figure might have been seen standing alone in the road outside the humble dwelling, in a listening attitude, as the occasional sound of beloved voices came back to her on the still wintry air. Not until the last tones had died away did she turn and go into the house. It was not long before the sun rose clear and bright, and soon industrious hands dispelled all lingering sense of loneliness.

The usual household duties over, she proceeded to prepare a pleasant surprise for her dear ones. Ere nightfall, from the [illegible] overhead depended graceful festoons of evergreen. The silvery frost-work of the window had a worthy emerald setting, and the spacious fire-place filled with golden light and warmth was surrounded by a rich mass of green; in short, the humble little dwelling had been completely transformed by the magic hands of love, and this same touch had fairly transfigured the face and form of the occupant until she appeared every inch the queen of this fragrant summer bower.

At last there was nothing more to be done. Each stocking, Willie's, Henry's, yes, John's and her own as well—all hung around the chimney, which was surely ample enough to admit the burly form of Kris Kringle himself, if he still kept up his old custom. And now it was time to prepare for the night. As she drew the plain white curtains together she found, to her surprise, that each window was nailed fast, and she knew that this was the work of dear, thoughtful John before he went away. Why had he been so worried about her she wondered. There was nothing to fear, she tried to reassure herself, as she went to the outside doors and drew the bolts; nevertheless, with candle in hand she searched thoroughly each room, not neglecting to lift the bed-valance, and investigate the proverbial hiding place of thieves and villains. Then she put the candle out and crept softly into bed. Many times she had stayed alone thus without a shadow of fear—why should she care now? she asked herself again and again, and trying to believe that she was only nervous from fatigue she at last dropped into a slumber.

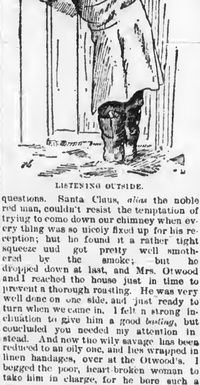
How long had she slept? She could not tell, but she had awakened with a start, and was sitting up in bed in a half conscious state. She could not tell what had roused her, but she thought it must have been the striking of the clock, for it was just telling the hour of twelve with startling distinctness; yet there she sat motionless long after the last stroke had died away in the oppressive stillness. The moonlight was shining through the curtains, casting an uncertain light over each object in the room. It seemed as if some mysterious presence had startled her. She listened with painful interest, her gaze fixed on the window opposite, and, as she looked, the dark outline of the casement seemed to move upward. No, it could not be. It must have been caused by the strong wind that was blowing; yet, surely the wind could not move it in that direction.

She thought of the Indians that Hiram had seen that day; she thought of the money concealed under the foot of the bed, and then John's charge to her regarding the danger-signal flashed through her mind. She sprang out of bed in an instant, but the next moment, to her dismay, she remembered that she had neglected to bring the dinner-horn into the house, and that it was then lying in its accustomed place in the woodshed. She would not venture out there for a kingdom. All her courage seemed to leave her. Noiselessly she went to the window to ascertain to a certainty that it was secure, and as she examined each one in turn, she could distinctly hear footsteps on the crackling snow, following her, and trying each window as she approached it. Then the steps seemed to retreat, and a few moments later she heard the door-latch softly lifted, but she knew she had nothing to fear from that direction, and taking advantage of the moment she timidly raised a corner of the curtain and looked out. Her fears were all too plainly verified, for there in the bright moonlight was the unmistakable figure of a great brawny Indian. She could clearly distinguish his swarthy features, and, as his blanket swayed to and fro in the wind she thought she detected a gleaming knife in his belt.

She hastily dropped the curtain and once more listened with breathless anxiety. For a time all was still; then a strange, rustling sound was heard, and the next thing she realized was that a heavy body was creeping along the roof. Great heavens! what was the creature going to do? A noise near the chimney seemed to be her answer. Already he was coming down there, and, taking in the situation at a glance, the courage and strength of desperation came to her. To rush into the room, drag out the straw bed and fling it on the dying embers was the work of scarcely an instant. Then involuntarily her eyes followed the upward direction of the blaze. There, through the thick smoke, she could plainly see hanging in the chimney a dark form, which appeared to be struggling, as if trying to extricate itself.

Wild with terror, and guided now only by impulse, she flew out of the house, reached the wood shed, and grasping the horn she blew such loud, frantic notes that they must have been heard for miles in the still, clear air. Then she started to run down the road, but every thing swam before her, her knees sank under her, and the next moment she knew no more.

"Never mind; don't talk just now," John was saying to her when she came to herself. "I'll tell you all about it if you'll promise to lie quite still and not ask any questions. Santa Claus, alias the noble red man, couldn't resist the temptation of trying to come down our chimney when every thing was so nicely fixed up for his reception; but he found it a rather tight squeeze and got pretty well smothered by the smoke; but he dropped down at last, and Mrs. Otwood and I reached the house just in time to prevent a thorough roasting. He was very well done on one side, and just ready to turn when we came in. I felt a strong inclination to give him a good basting, but concluded you needed my attention instead. And now the wily savage has been reduced to an oily one, and lies wrapped in linen bandages, over at the Otwood's. I begged the poor, heart-broken woman to take him in charge, for he bore such a strong resemblance to Hiram that I thought he might turn out to be a long-lost brother, or something of that kind, you know. By the way, I'm under an impression that as soon as the patient recovers we shall lose our neighbors. Can you guess why?" John asked, in a most significant manner. "What! you don't understand yet?" he continued, as a confused, puzzled look was the only answer. "Well, I must drop enigmas, I see, and speak in plain English. Your terrible visitor was none other than Hiram Otwood, himself, disguised as an Indian. You remember how cold and blue he looked last night when he came in so suddenly upon us. He had been listening outside for about twenty minutes. No wonder he sat there all of a shiver! The upshot of the matter is that the villain heard every word of our conversation and came for the money I left with you. There, there! you promised you wouldn't talk any," and before the little woman could utter a word John had left the room, softly closing the door after him.



LISTENING OUTSIDE.

Julia H. Thayer.

What He Got.

"Ah! Good-morning, Dribelles. How did you fare on Christmas! Quite lucky, I presume?"

"Tolerable."

"What did you get?"

"I got full."

"Full of what?"

"Why, full of dinner, to be sure."

A LITERARY CRIME.

The Law of Plagiarism as Laid Down By Two English Magazines.

Two or three years ago the Saturday Review laid down the law of plagiarism in three clauses: (1) "In the first place, we would permit any great modern artist to recut and set anew the literary gems of classic times and of the Middle Ages. (2) Our second rule would be that all authors have an equal right to the stock situations which are the common store of humanity." (3) "Finally, we presume that an author has a right to borrow or buy an idea, if he frankly acknowledges the transaction." In commenting on this code I suggested that there might be a difficulty of interpretation in the first clause, for who is to declare any man to be a great artist? In the second clause, the law is clearly stated, and whether any given situation is or is not common property is a question of fact for the jury. The only difficulty in applying the third clause is in defining precisely the degree of frankness and fullness required in acknowledging the indebtedness. But hypercriticism is out of place in considering a suggestion as valuable, as needful just now, and as neatly put as this triple law of the contributor to the Saturday Review. A general acceptance of this code would tend to clear the air of the vague charges of plagiarism which hang in heavy clouds over the literary journals. Before we can decide whether an author is guilty of the offense we must be agreed on what constitutes the crime, what are its elements, and what are the exceptions. I have ventured to draw up the statute of exemptions in a form slightly different from that given in the Saturday Review, a little broader and stronger, and perhaps a little simpler: "A writer is at liberty to use the work of his predecessors as he will, provided always that (1) he does not take credit, even by implication, for what he has not invented, and (2) that he does not in any way infringe on the pecuniary rights of the original owner." When M. Victorien Sardou brought out the farcical comedy, "Les Pommes du Voisin," he was accused of having stolen it from a tale of Charles de Bernard, and he retorted instantly with evidence that he had the permission of the holders of the Bernard copyrights, who were to share in the profits of the play. Here M. Sardou was innocent under the second clause of my law, but guilty under the first, inasmuch as he had concealed his indebtedness to Charles de Bernard and had taken credit for an inventory which was not his own. When Mr. Charles Reade turned Mrs. Burnett's "That Lass o' Lowrie's" into a play called "Joan," without asking the permission of the American author, he was guilty under the second clause and innocent under the first, for there was no concealment of the source of the drama. With a proper understanding of what is and what is not plagiarism, there should go a greater circumspection in bringing the accusation. Plagiarism is the worst of literary crimes. It is theft, neither more nor less. All who desire to uphold the honor of literature, and to see petty larceny and highway robbery meet with their just punishment, are concerned that the charge shall not be idly brought or carelessly answered. But how so often has the amateur literary detective cried "Wolf," that patience is exhausted, and accusations of literary theft have been flung broadcast, until they may be met with a smile of contempt. This is not as it should be. It is contrary to public policy that the literary conscience should become callous. The charge of plagiarism is serious, and it should not be lightly brought or lightly borne.—Longman's Magazine.

—We trust we do not lack a feeling of gratitude for the blessings we enjoy, but we are clearly of the opinion that Thanksgiving Day should be selected so as to fall on a Sunday and be made an occasion for devout worship in truth, rather than a day of feasting and sporting. Further than this, we doubt the acceptability of the modern way of observing the day—a small per cent. of the people meeting in their respective houses of worship, while the bulk of "tired workers" may be at the pool and billiard tables, in the wine rooms, or making the day one of general frolicking.—Paris (Tex.) North Texan.

—"Every time I look at this painted china," said a physician, "I think of how the girls have suffered. Lavender oil and turpentine are used in working china. The fumes of these liquids in a close room amount to a poison that few girls can withstand. I know of a dozen young ladies who have lost their beauty, animation and health by painting china, and I shall be glad when daubs of paint on a teacup will be no longer thought charming."—Good Housekeeping.

—A hunter near Hartwell, Ga., shot a peculiar bird a few days ago. It measured six feet from tip to tip of wings, has a head as large as the largest house cat, and a thick coat of white feathers with small dark spots. It is not at all vicious, but will allow a person to stroke its head, and appears to enjoy it. It has large yellow eyes, and an appetite for small birds, and its legs and feet are thickly coated with feathers.

—James Pool, of Rhode Island, invented and circulated the following verse:

"There was a young lady named Barry,
And sadly she wanted to marry;
She went for a man
Whose name was McCan,
And he skipped off to Boston, by Harry.

James was skipped into court on a suit for slander and damages, and that brilliant effort cost him $170 in cash and three months in the county jail.

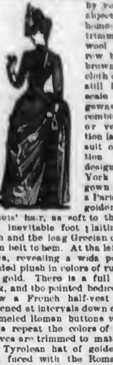
Stylish Winter Fabrics—Elegant Effects in Their Making Up—Heliotrope the Leading Color for This Winter.

[New York Special Correspondence.]

All indications point to an immense and unprecedented success of woolen costumes in tweed, cheviot, wool-armure and tricots, fancy meltons, camels' hair goods, home-spun fabrics and ribbed and striped materials in rich combinations of color. There are also countless lists of shaggy fabrics in boucle, frise frappe and bourette effects, many of these showing the long popular "heather" mixtures, but appearing this season in unique and beautiful weaves fresh from foreign looms, which secure them a place among the "high novelties" of the present gorgeous exhibit of winter goods. In making up these stylish fabrics, the most refined elegance is effect, and the most perfect degree of mechanical skill in execution, are sought. Suits of homespun come first in the rank of simple tailor style for utility purposes, these generally of one fabric alone, and with no other lining than machine-stitched edges and rows of handsome buttons. This fabric is a rough surfaced wool, either plainly woven, or in wide diagonals, or otherwise is woven in blocks or stripes. The stylish navy blue diagonals, and other serges worn by young ladies who object to the sober home-spun fabrics, are trimmed with fancy wool braids or narrow bands of golden brown beaver. Basket cloth diagonals range still higher in the scale of tailor-made gowns, these richly combined with plush or velvet. Illustration is here given of a suit of this description issued by a designer in New York city. The gown is modeled from a Paris dress made of golden fawn-colored camels' hair, as soft to the touch as silk. The inevitable foot plaiting is dispensed with and the long Grecian drapery reaches from belt to hem. At the left side, the skirt parts, revealing a wide panel of Roman-plaided plush in colors of ruby, moss green and gold. There is a full drapery at the back, and the pointed bodice is cut away to show a French half-vest of the plush, fastened at intervals down either side, with enameled Roman buttons whose tinted devices repeat the colors of the plaid. The sleeves are trimmed to match, and en suite is a Tyrolean hat of golden fawn-colored felt, faced with the Roman velvet, and trimmed with loops of Picot velvet ribbon with a tropical bird set in their midst.



Most of the draperies upon winter costumes are arranged to fall nearly, if not quite, to the foot of the skirt, leaving the sides open, revealing countless novel effects in panel adorning. The front drapery is adjusted by means of extra deep plaits, some of which fasten to the belt, so high are they raised.

Apropos of colors, heliotrope is likely to again become the rage this winter. The trained dress will fall in superb unbroken folds, but there will be much pains expended upon the adorning of the corsage, where extra effects will be sought by the assistance of rich old lace berthas pearl embroideries and dainty Russian guimpes of hand wrought Indian muslin.

A stylish model for a dinner dress is here illustrated. The gown is made of pale lilac faille francaise combined with dark heliotrope velvet. The underskirt is trimmed with a wide band of the velvet with loops of velvet let into slashed portions of the side of the skirt. A full tunic drapes the front and back, and an oddly shaped French jacket of the velvet opens over a vest of pale yellow kid, embroidered with heliotrope beads.

Very dark heliotrope plush is made into the elegant French surtouts and Russian pelisses to be worn this winter. Plush and velvet redingotes fitting the form very closely, are to be highly favored next season. Many ladies, however, who wish to display their gowns, prefer the short French coats of seal or plush, these decorated with bands of beaver, blue fox, bear skin or Grecian lynx. These jaunty coats are also made of rough cloth of every sort and shade, and of genuine English mixed suitings. There are also displayed some very chic jackets of deep blue pilot cloth, trimmed with blue fox or dark brown fur, and fastened with old bronze buttons. These are charming. Hoods are appended to every sort of garment upon which they can possibly be adjusted from my lady's white dressing gown to the long luxurious Russian mantles made of the most expensive seal or sable fur, and but few really smart jackets are worn by stylish young ladies without a hood a la Monk, a la Capuchin, or a la Turk. Round-shouldered women, however, should shun them altogether, and dumpy women look far better with a straight-backed coat minus this fashionable addition. The new waiter wraps are new in fabric only—not design. The inventive genius who hitherto has evolved wonders in the way of wraps has come to a standstill, and coats, and cloaks, and visites, and dolmans made two and three years ago, still hold their own and need but a little new beaded passementerie or fur trimming to make them look exactly like the "habit from abroad," and it is wonderful beyond expression what an amount of beaded glitter and flash can be purchased for the sum of ten dollars.

—A noble-minded merchant of world-wide acquaintance, long years of experience, and vast wealth honorably accumulated, was asked how many dishonest men in mercantile life he had met with during his long and varied career. Said he: "I have traded with most all the civilized races of the earth, and in all my long and varied commercial experience, in which more often than otherwise the honor of the man was my only protection, I found but two or three men whom I considered innately dishonest. These men would have remained the same in principle had they been engaged in any other vocation of life."—Dry Goods Chronicle.

He had a horse under perfect control, and in this, perhaps, he excelled any of his rivals, and had the gift of pushing a horse at a pinch and bringing him in with a rush at the finish.—N. Y. Sun.

THE GIANT OF MEDICINES.
The Most Effective and Popular Remedy Ever Discovered.
WHY IS IT SO EFFECTIVE IN SO MANY DIFFERENT DISEASES?

WHY one remedy can affect so many cases is this: The diseases have a common cause, and a remedy that can affect the cause, permanently cures all the diseases. Unlike any other organ in the body, the kidney when diseased, may itself be free from pain, and the very fact that it is not painful leads many people to deny that it is diseased, but Medical Authorities agree that it can be far gone with disease and yet give forth no pain, because it has few if any nerves of sensation, and these are the only means of conveying the sense of pain; thus unconsciously diseased it affects the entire system. We do not open a watch to see if it is going or is in good order: We look at the hands, or note the accuracy of its time. So we need not open the kidney to see if it is diseased. We study the condition of the system. Now then, KIDNEY DISEASE produces Any of the following Common and Unsuspected

SYMPTOMS: Back ache; Unusual desire to urinate at night; Fluttering and pain in the heart; Tired Feeling; Unusual amount of Urea or Froth in water; Irritated, hot and dry skin; Fickle Appetite; Scalding sensations; Acid, bitter taste, with furred tongue in the Morning; Headache and Neuralgia; Abundance of pale, or scanty flow of dark-colored water; Sour Stomach; Heartburn with Dyspepsia; Intense pain, upon sudden excitement, in the Small of the Back; Deposit of mucous-like matter after urination; Loss of Memory; Rheumatism, chills and fever and Pneumonia; Dropsical Swellings; Red or White brick dust, albumen and tube casts in the water; Constipation, alternating with Looseness; Short breath, Pleurisy and Bronchial affections; Yellow & pale skin, etc.

These are only the evident disturbances or symptoms caused by a diseased condition of the kidneys. Now then, isn't it clear to you that the kidneys, being the cause of all these derangements, if they are restored to health by the great specific "Warner's SAFE Cure," the majority of the above ailments will disappear? There is NO MYSTERY ABOUT IT. It does cure many bad states of the system precisely as we have indicated. Now when the kidneys are diseased, the albumen, the life property of the blood, escapes through their walls and passes away in the water, while the urea, the kidney poison, remains, and it is this kidney poison in the blood, that, circulating throughout the entire body, affects every organ and produces all the above symptoms.

Therefore, we say confidently that "Warner's SAFE Cure" is THE MOST EFFECTIVE MEDICINE EVER DISCOVERED for the human race. It is the common remedy which, overcoming the common cause, removes the greatest possible number of evil effects from the system. Let us note a few of these diseases and how they are affected by kidney poison, and cured by

CONSUMPTION: In a great many cases Consumption is only the effect of a diseased condition of the system and not an original disease; if the kidneys are inactive and there is any natural weakness in the lungs, the kidney poison attacks their substance and eventually they waste away and are destroyed. Dip your finger in acid and it is burned. Wash the finger every day in acid and it soon becomes a festering sore and is eventually destroyed. The kidney poison acid in the blood has the same destructive effect upon the lungs: For this reason a person whose kidneys are ailing will have grave attacks of Pneumonia in the Spring of the year, Lung fevers, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, etc., at all seasons of the year. Rectify the action of the kidneys by "Warner's SAFE Cure," as many hundreds of thousands have done, and you will be surprised at the improvement in the condition of the lung.

IMPAIRED EYE-SIGHT: Kidney acid with some persons has an especial affinity for the optic nerve, and though we have never urged it as a cure for disordered eye-sight, many persons have written us expressing surprise that after a thorough course of treatment with "Warner's SAFE Cure," their eye-sight has been vastly improved. In fact, one of the best oculists in the country says that half the patients that come to him with bad eyes, upon examination he discovers are victims of kidney disorder. We have no doubt that the reason why so many people complain of failing eye-sight early in life, is that, all unconscious to themselves, their kidneys have been out of order for years, and the kidney poison is gradually ruining the system.

OPIUM HABITS: It is a well-known fact, recently shown anew, that opium, morphine, cocaine, whisky, tobacco and other enslaving habits capture their victims by their paralyzing effects upon the kidneys and liver. In these organs the appetite is developed and sustained, and the best authorities state that the habits can not be gotten rid of until the kidneys and liver are restored to perfect health. For this purpose, leading medical authorities, after a thorough examination of all claimants for the honor of being the only specific for those organs, have awarded the prize to "Warner's SAFE Cure."

RHEUMATISM: Every reputable physician will tell you that rheumatism is caused by an acid condition of the system. With some it is uric acid, or kidney poison; in others, it is lithic acid, or liver poison. This acid condition is caused by inactivity of the kidneys and liver false action of the stomach and food assimilating organs. It affects old people more than young people because the acid has been collecting in the system for years and finally the system becomes entirely acidified. These acids produce all the various forms of rheumatism. "Warner's SAFE Cure" acting upon the kidneys and liver, neutralizing the acid and correcting their false action, cures many cases of rheumatism. "Warner's SAFE Rheumatic Cure," alternating with the use of "WARNER'S SAFE CURE" completes the work.

BLADDER DISORDERS: Gross and other high medical authorities say that most of the bladder diseases originate with false action of the kidneys, and urinary tract. Uric acid constantly coursing through these organs inflames and eventually destroys the inner membrane, producing the intense suffering. Sometimes this kidney acid settles in the kidneys in the form of Gravel, which in its descent to the bladder produces kidney colic. Sometimes the acid solidifies in the Bladder, producing calculous or Stone. "Warner's SAFE Cure" has restored thousands of cases of inflammation and catarrh of the bladder and has effectively corrected the tendency to the formation of gravel and stone. It challenges comparison with all other remedies in this work. Buy to-day,

"WARNER'S SAFE CURE."

CONGESTION: Congestion is a collecting together of blood in any one place. If there is loss of nervous action in any organ the blood vessels do not allow the blood to circulate and it stagnates. If this condition exists very long the collecting blood clots and eventually destroys the organ. Many persons are unconscious victims of this very common condition. The heart, determined as it is to force blood into every part of the system, has to work harder to get it through the clogged organ, and eventually the Heart breaks down and palpitation, excessive action, rush of blood to the head, distressing head aches, indicate that the Congestion has become chronic and is doing damage to the entire system. Congestion of the kidneys is one of the commonest of complaints and is the beginning of much chronic misery. "Warner's SAFE Cure" will remove it.

FEMALE COMPLAINTS: What we have said about Congestion applies with particular force to the above complaints. They are as common as can be, and as every doctor can tell you, most of them begin in this congestive condition of the system, which, not being regularly corrected, grows into disease and produces these countless sufferings which can be alluded to but not described in a public print. Thousands have been permanently cured.

BLOOD DISORDERS: It is not strange that so many, many people write us that since they have given themselves thorough treatment with "Warner's SAFE Cure" their thick and turgid blood, their heavy, blotched, irritable skin have disappeared under its potent influence. The kidney poison in the blood is the cause. It is not readily purified in the lungs, and the result is the impurities come out of the surface of the body, and if there is any local disease all the badness in the blood seems to collect there. Our experience justifies us in the statement that "Warner's SAFE Cure" is "the greatest blood purifier known." The treatment must be very thorough.

STOMACH DISORDERS: Many people complain more or less throughout the year with stomach disorders. Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Waterbrash, heat and distress in the stomach, sharp pains, frequent aches, want of appetite, lack of energy. Now, these are exactly the conditions that will be produced in the stomach when the blood is filled with kidney poison: People dose themselves with all sorts of stomach reliefs, but get no better: They never will get better until they give their attention to a thorough reviving of kidney and liver action by the means of the only specific—"Warner's SAFE Cure."

CONSTIPATION, PILES: These distressing ailments, more common among one class than the other, are not original disorders, but are secondary to imperfect action of the kidneys and liver. The natural cathartic is bile, which is taken from the blood by the liver. If the liver fails the bile is not forthcoming and the person gets into a constipated habit. This, eventually followed by piles, is almost always an indication of congested liver, and a breaking down of the system. Remove the congestion, revive the liver and restore the kidneys by the use of "Warner's SAFE Cure," and these constitutional secondary diseases disappear.

HEADACHES: Many people suffer untold agonies all their lives with headache. They try every remedy in vain, for they have not struck the cause. With some temperaments, kidney acid in the blood, in spite of all that can be done, will irritate and inflame the brain and produce intense suffering. Those obstinate headaches which do not yield readily to local treatment, may be regarded quite certainly as of kidney origin.

THESE ARE SCIENTIFIC FACTS; and, from the way we have set them forth, it will plainly be seen, that the statement we make, that "Warner's SAFE Cure" is the "most effective remedy ever discovered for the greatest number of human diseases," is justified. It is not a remedy without a reputation. Its sales for the past year have been greater than ever, and the advertising thereof less than ever, showing incontestibly that the merit of the medicine has given it a permanent place and value.

People have a dreadful fear of Bright's disease, but we can tell them from our experience that it is the ordinary kidney disease that produces no pain that is to-day the greatest enemy of the human race: great and all powerful, because in nine cases out of ten, its presence is not suspected by either the physician or the victim! The prudent man who finds himself year after year troubled with little odd aches and ailments that perplex him, ought not to hesitate a moment as to the real cause of his disease. If he will give himself thorough constitutional treatment with "Warner's SAFE Cure" and "Warner's SAFE Pills," he will get a new lease of life and justify in his own experience, as hundreds of thousands have done, that 93 per cent. of human diseases are really attributable to a deranged condition of the kidneys, and that they will disappear when those organs are restored to health.

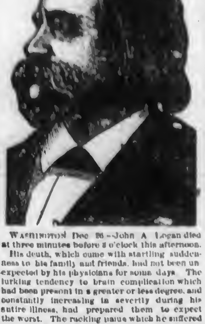
GENERAL JOHN A. LOGAN,

The Soldier-Statesman Dies at Washington,

Surrounded by His Family and Many Intimate Friends.



Washington, Dec. 26.—John A. Logan died at three minutes before 3 o'clock this afternoon.

His death, which came with startling suddenness to his family and friends, had not been unexpected by his physicians for some days. The lurking tendency to brain complication which had been present in a greater or less degree, and constantly increasing in severity during his entire illness, had prepared them to expect the worst. The racking pains which he suffered during the early days of his illness yielded to treatment, but left him in a weak and exhausted condition from which he never rallied, and upon which the fever preyed with increasing violence until the hour of his death. After last midnight his pulse grew weaker and weaker, and at 4 o'clock this morning his condition was such as to cause great fear of his immediate death. After this he rallied somewhat, and at the consultation which was held at 9 o'clock this morning, his pulse was found to be somewhat stronger, but his general condition was not such as to give any hope of ultimate recovery. Dr. Baxter relieved Dr. Hamilton at the conclusion of the consultation, and continued in constant attendance until the General's death. The physicians again met in consultation at 1:30 p. m., when it was apparent that the patient was rapidly sinking, and could live but a few hours. At 2 o'clock the General revived sufficiently to recognize his wife, who has been at his bedside night and day during his entire illness. As she spoke to him he looked up into her face, and all who were present knew that he recognized her. This was the last manifestation of consciousness. He then wearily closed his eyes and sank into a lethargic sleep from which he never woke.

While the public has been aware for a week or more that General Logan was confined to his room with rheumatism, many even of his most intimate friends were, as late as yesterday afternoon, unsuspicious of the serious character of the attack, and to the masses the announcement in this morning's papers that the statesman lay at death's door brought a shock of sorrowful surprise. All day long the carriages of sympathetic callers have occupied the space in front of Calumet Place, while hundreds of pedestrians of all walks of life have climbed the hill upon which the Logan mansion stands, to ask if it were true that all hope was past. Among those who thus actively expressed their grief and sympathy were Secretary and Mrs. Whitney, Secretary and Mrs. Manning, Senators Ransom and Walthall, General and Mrs. Cockrell, Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft Davis, General Mahone, Senators Platt, Mitchell and Eustis, Congressmen Hitt, of Illinois, and Symes, of Colorado, General and Colonel Sheridan, Professor and Mrs. Bell, Senator and Mrs. Payne, Justice Matthews, Senators Harris and Whitthorne, Senator and Mrs. Miller, Senator Voorhees and Blair, and Congressmen Burrows and Townshend.

Scores of telegrams of condolence have been pouring in during the day from all parts of the country, among the latest being one from ex-Senator Conkling, expressing his inability to credit the reported imminence of the danger and asking for information.

Though the doctors have given no word of hope during the day, yet the attendants, as late as this noon, refused to give full credence to the alarming bulletins, and whispered to inquirers something of the chances that the sturdy frame of the sufferer, and the united skill of the consulting physicians would bring a revival of vitality sufficient to dominate the insidious poison in his frame. But after noon no one ventured to express a hope that the sufferer would last during the day.

Intimate friends gathered with the grief-stricken and almost frantic relatives about the bedside, while in the spacious hall and parlors below a sad-faced throng remained in hushed expectancy. The stifled sobs of the wife and children, and the inarticulate utterances of the dying man, were audible at times throughout the mansion. At 2:55 Dr. Baxter came out of the sick room and said to one who was waiting for intelligence: "Simply say he is dying." Then the voice of prayer at the bedside rose above the sobs of the stricken mourners, and with its end ended the life of the warrior-statesman.

Among those at the bedside of the dying man were Senator and Mrs. Cullom and daughter, General Sheridan, Senator and Mrs. Cockrell, General Raum, Congressmen Henderson and Thomas, of Illinois, and Mrs. Thomas; Senator Miller and wife, Congressman Symes, of Colorado; Dr. Baxter, General Henry Strong, and Daniel Shepard and wife, of Chicago, and the General's private secretaries, W. H. Taylor and Albert Hall. At the head of the bed knelt Mrs. Logan, one arm encircling her dying husband's neck, the hand of the other stroking his forehead. At her side were John A. Logan, jr., and Rev. Dr. Newman. Opposite these were the daughter, Mrs. Tucker, and her husband, and George A. Logan, the General's nephew.

"The scene," said Dr. Baxter, "was one of the saddest that I have ever witnessed. All present were deeply affected. The grief of Mrs. Logan and her children was pitiful in the extreme."

It is stated that the General's body will, no doubt, be taken to Illinois for burial, but no definite arrangements for the funeral will be made until Mrs. Logan, who is wholly prostrated, can be consulted.

Senator Cullom, who was at the dying man's side continuously from last evening, was requested to temporarily take charge of matters. He sent at once for the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, who, upon his arrival half an hour later, entered upon the usual preliminary arrangements for the funeral by summoning an undertaker and telegraphing to the Sergeant-at-Arms and to others at a distance.

General Logan's system was very sensitive to weather changes of a particular kind, and he has often been heard to remark in a jocular way that he believed he could accurately foretell the coming of a snow storm. The seeds of his disorder were sown during the war: his first attack of rheumatism having followed it immediately at the end of a twenty-four hours' march through a blinding snow-storm. His last attack, too, resulted from brief exposure to the snow storm of a fortnight ago, and his death preceded by but a few minutes the beginning of a heavy flurry, which, though brief, covered the earth with a thick carpet of white.

FRUITFUL OPERATION.

A Wire Hook Taken From a Child's Throat to Ease a Mother's Anguish.

Akron, O., Dec. 27.—A terrible distressing accident occurred here yesterday to [illegible] the five-year-old son of [illegible]. The boy was playing with a piece of wire about eight inches long, when in some manner he thrust it into his throat until only about an inch of the wire could be seen. The terrible part of the accident was that the end of the wire which was in the throat had been bent into a hook which somehow fastened itself so that it could not be pulled out. Blood flowed in a perfect stream and almost strangled the child. A surgeon was called and after examining the case said that the only way to remove the wire would be to jerk it out of the throat by force. The mother was so entirely shocked by this method of procedure that she was lately crazed and it required the full force of four men to hold her to prevent her from attacking the surgeon, who gave three hard jerks on the wire before he tore the hook loose from its fastening, each time tearing the throat and causing the blood to spurt in a most shocking manner. The injury to the throat was very great and the child has suffered the most terrible pain. It was found that the boy may be speechless as a result, if he recovers from the terrible shock.

SQUEALED.

Fotheringham Weakens and Admits That He Stood In With the Express Robbery,

Upon a Promise of Partial Immunity from Punishment—Jim Cummings' Identity.

Chicago, Ill., Dec. 26.—It is now stated that Fotheringham, the express messenger, who is in jail at St. Louis on suspicion of being implicated in the Adams Express robbery on the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad October last, disclosed the whole story upon a promise of partial immunity from punishment made to him by the officials. His story was to the effect that he did not know the actual robbers, or their whereabouts, but that a certain man, whose name is carefully concealed, negotiated with him plans for the robbery, which were afterward carried out. The name of this man and a description by which the detectives were able to identify him were given by Fotheringham, and from this the case was worked up and the man tracked to this city, where he was arrested Friday night with two others, who are suspected of being members of the gang. The detectives have recovered but $10,000 of the $55,000 stolen. It is likely the three prisoners will be taken to St. Louis to-morrow. The proverbial air of mystery around the Pinkerton headquarters in Fifth avenue was not lessened to-day, and the men under arrest for complicity in the Adams Express robbery are still unknown. That one of them is the facetious Jim Cummings is pretty evident. That Jim Cummings is not the name of the man in question is reasonably certain. There is a strong suspicion that Jim Cummings' baptismal name was Fred Witrosch and his family is an excellent one, living in Leavenworth, Kan.

While the two men bound and gagged the watchman, three others began work on the safe, in which was [illegible]. Holes were drilled and several times powder was rammed in and exploded. The first pair of doors were finally opened, and work was begun on the inner doors of steel, but progress was so slow and daylight was so near that the cracksmen threw down their tools and hurried away. Minneapolis, Minn., Dec. 22.—About 8 o'clock this evening three men drove up in front of the large jewelry store of J. R. Elliott, corner of Nicollet avenue and Third street. Two of the men jumped from the sleigh, while the third held the horses. One of the men carried a heavy stick of wood, with which he smashed the large plate glass show window, in which were trays of diamonds, watches, etc., and hurriedly seized all the available jewelry and threw it into the sleigh, while his accomplice kept the crowd of people that swarmed the street at bay with cocked revolvers. Before anything could be done to apprehend them both men had jumped into the sleigh and driven rapidly up street, the driver wildly lashing the horses, and the robbers standing with revolvers pointed at the crowd. They secured between $6,000 and $7,000 worth of diamonds and watches. For boldness and daring this excels the James brothers' exploits. The streets were unusually crowded, and scores of people were looking at the display in Elliott's window at the time of the robbery. Several policemen were within half a block of the scene, but could not get there in time to apprehend the bold thieves. A Land Reformer Is a Governor of Wyoming Instead of a Land Grabber.

Mr. Moonlight, the recently defeated Democratic candidate for Governor of Kansas, has been named by the President for Territorial Governor of Wyoming in place of young Baxter, whose appointment a few weeks ago gave such [illegible] satisfaction to the citizens of the Territory interested. The prompt dropping of Mr. Baxter arises from causes which show how much in earnest the Administration is in its determination to save the remnant of the public lands for the use of actual settlers. The Governor who was removed to give place to Baxter earned his dismissal by siding with the land grabbers on every occasion and by attacking the policy of Land Commissioner Sparks in his annual report to the President. It had been supposed that Baxter was not involved in any of the land schemes of the far West, but his appointment had hardly been announced when reports came to the White House that Baxter had not only interested himself in many of these enterprises but that, in open and flagrant violation of the President's order, he had fenced in many thousands of acres of public land. Unable to give a satisfactory account of himself in these respects, the young man was displaced and Mr. Moonlight, who is in hearty sympathy with the Administration's land policy, was given the place. It will begin to dawn upon some of the free and easy land-grabbers of that section after awhile that the day of big ranches with whooping cowboys to chase and murder settlers is past.—Chicago Herald.

An Era of Peace.

A noteworthy illustration of the extent to which the South has already outgrown the era of the Confederacy has just been furnished in Alabama. A proposition was made that the Legislature should make a liberal appropriation for the erection of a marble monument at the capital in memory of the Alabamians who lost their lives in the Southern army. But the new Governor, Thomas Seay, himself a soldier on the Confederate side, in his inaugural address takes ground against such use of the public funds, at least until ample provision has been made for the care of surviving soldiers, and even questions the wisdom of such an appropriation under any circumstances, recalling the fact that there were those among the ancients who opposed the erection of monuments in commemoration of the triumphs of civil strife, and that at one time some of those that had been erected were razed to the earth. The Mobile Register, one of the most prominent Democratic newspapers in the State, goes still further than the Governor. It argues that the proposition is unconstitutional, and that even if it were constitutional, it would not be equitable to tax all citizens for a monument which does not represent the sympathies of all the people, since there are "a vast number of taxpayers in Alabama, old Union men and their descendants, colored men, new-comers from the North, and others who had no sympathy with the Confederate cause."—N. Y. Post.

Shows an Increase.

The second annual report of the treasury under Democratic management is before the country, and it shows that the net receipts for the last fiscal year were $336,439,000, and the net expenditures $242,481,000—the receipts having been $12,749,000 greater, and the expenditures $17,743,000 less than for the preceding year. There was a decrease of $1,900,000 in the civil expenses; $100,000 in the cost of foreign intercourse; $45,000 in the cost of the Indian service, and similar reductions in the War and Navy Departments, in the expenses of the District of Columbia and in the miscellaneous expenditures. There is only one item that shows an increase, and that is pensions to Union soldiers. These have increased from $55,102,000 last year, to $63,404,000. It seems then that, while Union veterans and widows are actually better taken care of under a Democratic than under a Republican Administration, the finances of the Government have been placed in a thriftier condition than they ever were before—an increased income, diminished expenditures and a large surplus. The downfall of the Republican party did not mark the doom of the country. It was pretty rough on the Republican party, but the country not only survives it, but actually thrives under it.—St. Louis Republican.

The Fisheries Question.

The President has taken the right stop concerning the outrages inflicted upon our fishermen by the Canadian Government by informing the British Government that it will assuredly be held responsible for all damages and be held to reparation not merely by the summary seizure of their vessels and the exaction of heavy fines in advance of hearing and judgment, but for the curtailment of privileges to which they were justly entitled under commercial regulations. The published correspondence as conducted by Secretary Bayard is statesmanlike and dignified, and the Secretary talks quite as plainly as is the custom in diplomatic notes. The correspondence will unquestionably create a very favorable impression and remove any feeling of dissatisfaction with supposed inaction. It now remains for Congress to adopt the recommendations of the President, and then for the United States to see to it that full reparation is made for all the losses and damage which the American fishermen have suffered at the hands of the Canadian authorities.—Christian at Work.

—We should need to go back to the early days of the Government and search the State papers of Alexander Hamilton to find an abler document than the report of Mr. Manning. For breadth of view, comprehensiveness of argument, logical directness, and a fine power of so grouping a mass of detail as to illustrate and enforce a central proposition, the treasury report is a model.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press. (Rep.)

—The correspondence relating to the fisheries, so far as its character is disclosed in the abstract which has been printed, is marked by a firmness and steadiness of purpose on the part of Secretary Bayard which will be an agreeable surprise to many who have felt that the American case was likely to go by default.—Boston Journal. (Rep.)

THE PRESIDENT'S PENSIONS.

The Liberality of the Administration Coupled with Justice to the Veterans of the War.

The sound, practical views advanced by President Cleveland in his message on the subject of pensions dispose of the misstatements and misrepresentations so liberally indulged in last summer by Republican Senators and members of Congress and their home organs. His appeals for an open system of pensioning, which will do away with the pernicious political influence that now taint the noble expression of the Nation's gratitude towards its defenders. The custom of resorting to Congress for a special pension act to override the decision of the well organized bureau designed for the examination and consideration of all pension cases opens the door, as the President states, to the allowance of questionable claims and presents fraudulent claims in such a guise and so surrounded by sentiment and patriotic feeling that they are hard to resist. In his vetoes of a number of these claims, last summer, the President pointed out in each instance the baseless character of the claim. It is idle to speak of the Nation's ingratitude toward the veterans in view of the fact that it has paid out more in pensions for disability sustained in service than all the rest of the world has paid in centuries. The law protecting the pensioner has been so carefully drawn that there can be no fear of injustice when the law is fully carried out.

Under former Administrations of the Pension Bureau, especially in 1884, shameless misuse of power and gross partisanship perverted the patriotic intentions of the people. To save votes for Mr. Blaine the law was violated and deserving pensioners were injured. By the political use of pensions a soldier's right to a pension was made to depend upon his service to the Republican party after the war and not upon his services in the field for his country. The boards of examining surgeons and the special examiners were all Republicans, selected with a view to their willingness to misuse their power for partisan purposes. The Democratic Commissioner of Pensions has provided against this abuse by selecting impartially from both parties. The history of the Pension Bureau, under Republican management, especially in 1884, is an unbroken record of partisan prostitution of the noblest of our public agencies, of danger to our free institutions, of robbery of the taxpayers, degradation of the pensioner, insult to the Union veterans and disgrace to the responsible party.

The relief of the disabled veteran is not an act of charity, but of justice and duty on the part of the Government. The President advances the sound argument that when the veterans who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age, or through sickness or misfortune, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of a special act in each case. Under such an act relief may be claimed as a right and according to law, not, as sometimes happens now, in evasion of it. The veterans are our fellow citizens, and are equally interested in the passage and faithful execution of wholesome laws. The charge that the Democratic Administration has been in any sense hostile to the cause of pensioners is easily disproved by the fact that more work has been done during the past year by the Pension Bureau, at less cost to the Government, than during any previous year since the bureau was organized.—Albany Argus.

A True Reformer.

The Massachusetts Civil-Service Reform Association lately held its meeting in Boston. President Darwin E. Ward delivered an address in which he said, after referring to the old system of filling all offices:

> The evils of this condition of affairs have been greatly mitigated by the action of President Cleveland during his Administration. He has not merely provided a faithful board of commissioners for the execution of the law enacted by Congress, but, animated by the spirit of that law, he has striven to maintain the principles that public office is a public trust to be filled as the public welfare, rather than the exigencies of party managers, may require; and that the faithful public servant holding a place of no political significance, either in itself or in the manner in which it is held, ought not to be proscribed for the exercise of his right as a citizen to hold his own political opinions and express them by his vote. These principles are obviously just, and yet they are opposed to the political tradition of half a century. By the steady assertion and application of them President Cleveland has brought about a revolution in political opinion and practice of the greatest benefit to the country. He has infused into the civil service a spirit of fidelity to the public interest, and a sense of subordination and responsibility to the Government that have placed it on a higher level than has been known for more than a generation. Mightily has he wrought in this cause, and great the results he has achieved. Nothing more redounds to his honor than even the honest complaining or the criticism that is sometimes leveled upon his action. For it is always an attempt to judge him by the lofty standard of public duty that by precept and practice he has himself established. But the best result of his labors will not have been accomplished until these principles are made as obligatory as they can be constitutionally upon his successors, through the establishment by law of the methods of the Civil-Service reform wherever it can be properly applied.

An Anti-Salary-Grabber.

Fourteen years ago next February, Mr. Cox arose in the House of Representatives to protest against the infamous salary-grab which the Forty-second Congress was then contemplating. In denouncing the proposed act, he was almost, if not quite, alone. He voted steadily against the grab at every stage, and he voted against the bill in which the steal was incorporated; and when the grab went through, he was among the first to return to the treasury the five thousand dollars which became his share of the ill-gotten spoils. This record of scrupulous integrity in the matter of his own pecuniary relations with the Government he serves, ought to be enough to prevent Ohio editors, hebetudinous or otherwise, from slandering Mr. Cox. No man in Congress works harder to earn the salary that is his just due; no man in Congress is quicker to refuse to draw from the treasury money that does not properly belong to him for services rendered.—N. Y. Sun.

—Some paragrapher has started an item on the rounds to the effect that Senator Edmunds has constructed a fine toboggan slide. In commenting upon it there is some difference of opinion as to whether the Vermont Senator will or will not let Jimmy Blaine slide. There can be none, however, over the fact that, accustomed though Blaine is to the severity of Maine winters, he would find it remarkably cool if he dropped around.—Detroit Free Press.

Dudley Walton stabs and seriously wounds Peter Lewis in Cherry Alley. Now will the Enquirer be kind enough to tell us where a fellow's cherry alley is?

The Cincinnati Enquirer asks "why should not the Congress of the United States create a handsome pension for the widow of Gen. Logan?"

In Kentucky there have been numerous lynchings, but none of them, for neatness, boldness and dispatch, would compare with the work of the Eaton, Ohio, mob.

Mr. Thobe has filed an amended petition in his contest of Mr. Carlisle's election. To make his charge as to Boone county conform to the truth it needs considerable amendment, after which there would be nothing left.

President Cleveland is a very sick man, having rheumatic gout, and has been confined to his room for several days. The great men of the country dying off so rapidly the country naturally becomes uneasy when one of them is announced as very sick.

The merchants of Marion County enjoined the collection of the 56 per cent. added to the valuation of their stores by the State Board of Equalization, and the trial coming on before Judge Russell, he decided that the State Board's power to raise the stores 56 per cent. can not be upheld.

Capt. Bligh, of Louisville, believes a slick band of bank thieves, who have been operating extensively in the west, are making their way towards that city. Their game is to enter a bank with a check or some other device, and while one diverts the attention of the teller with it the other seizes the cash and escapes.

The colored people of Florida, led by their ministers, have boycotted the railroads because the blacks, male and female, have to ride in smoking cars, though paying the full fare, and are subject to various insults. They will not travel by rail to camp meetings nor anywhere else, except in cases of dire necessity.

The Boone Co. Recorder admits that at the November election for Congressman, in two precincts in Boone county there were no Republican election officers, as required by law.—Rising Sun Recorder.

The Recorder don't now admit anything of the kind. But even if there had not been a Republican officer of election in the county, the Republican party has no cause for complaint—it had no candidate for Congress.

The case of C. W. Keith against the Covington stock yards company for several months pending in the Kenton county court, to compel the company to allow him to pass stock through their yards free, or to allow him to unload stock at his own platforms, adjoining the company's yard's, was decided in the United States Court last week, in favor of Keith. The Kentucky Central owing to a contract existing for some time between the company and the stock yards, would not deliver stock to any other party or parties in Covington or vicinity.

Louisville has two Democratic candidates for places on the State ticket: Standiford for Governor and Judge Richards for Attorney General. The interest of these two gentlemen clash somewhat, they being located in the same city. The friends of each candidate claim that their man will have a solid delegation in that city, which is more strength than the other can control. Standiford has the call on Richards in that the nomination he seeks is the first one to be made on the ticket, and if Richards' friends do not stand to him, they may expect to hear from Standiford's friends later on in the convention when it comes to the nomination of an Attorney-General. Standiford has the thumb-screws on Richards, as it were.

Death has taken from the [illegible] two members of its great trio, Senator John A. Logan, of Illinois. Senator Logan was 60 years old on his last birth day February 9th. At the age of twenty he enlisted in the service of his country, beginning as a private in the Mexican war, coming out a lieutenant. He was a public man from that time and his promotions came fast until he had nearly served at the pinnacle of fame in this country.

Senator Logan's political history is known to all, and owing to his bold, dashing manner he was admired by those who antagonized his political views as much as by those who were of the same faith. The Illinois Legislature meets next Wednesday and will choose a United States senator to fill the vacancy, but it will not be able to elect another Jno. A. Logan in many senses of the word.

"Whenever a new candidate for Governor is suggested, some newspaper asks: "What has he done to merit the place?" Wouldn't it be well enough also to ask what will he do in case he is elected? While it is true that with many politicians, promises, like pie-crust, are easily broken, it would do no harm to have the promises on the record."—Georgetown Times.

Promises from the candidates are not worth a snap. If a candidate's past life has not developed something that recommends him for the position of Governor, he is a good man to defeat. A man who is old enough to be eligible to the office of Governor has certainly manifested some executive ability if any there be in him. When the question, "what has a candidate done to merit the place?" is asked, it behooves his friends to demonstrate to the inquirer that his past life has developed his peculiar fitness for the position. In selecting a Governor we must not look to a man's future life only, but take a retrospect of his past also.

The following crop review appeared in last week's issue of the Farmer's Review, of Chicago. The tenor of the reports from the winter-wheat belt continues to be generally favorable, though the presence of the fly in various counties of Ohio and Indiana is reported, though no serious injury is yet indicated. The reports from Kansas are not as encouraging as one month ago, and a number of southern Illinois and northern Ohio and Indiana counties report the plant as looking feeble. 'Nine-tenths of the counties report, however, throughout the entire belt, that the crop is in good to fine condition. The movement of corn is reported to be moderately free in Missouri, but slow in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Illinois. Five Illinois and ten Iowa counties report this week that the corn supply is so short as to prevent any shipment or is entirely exhausted.

Whenever a Republican leader shows a tendency towards tariff reform he is at once declared to represent his party and all chimes in with him, but a Democrat representing the same views is denounced a free trader. An exchange says: "Senator Sherman clearly represented the Republican party when he pledged the Republican party to any proposition which was fairly meant to lessen taxation, but at the same time he announced that no interference with the industries of the country would be permitted which would disturb established business and cut down the wages of laboring men. To his proposition to remove the duty on sugar and thus reduce the revenue $60,000,000, a way that would be appreciated in every home in the United States, there was no answer."

The party leaders see the country has a tendency towards tariff reform, and they are edging that way.

The appointment of a Postmaster for Cynthiana has gotten Congressman Breckinridge into trouble. He recommended Miss Todd, the present incumbent, who has held the position for the past eight years. There was considerable opposition to her reappointment, while she was strongly endorsed by Democrats, who claim that her politics are those of a Democrat. Those opposing the appointment claim that no Democratic candidate can carry Harrison County under such flagrant abuses of the appointing power. Miss Todd' backers claim that her political pedigree is of the best strain, and that it would now be the meanest of mean acts for the Democrats [illegible] the Republicans [illegible] Miss Todd [illegible] Mr. Breckinridge [illegible]

Union Labor [illegible] Montana a good many [illegible] Mountains and lands to Mexico. It is understood, by the way, that [illegible] is not prevalent in Mexico.—Indianapolis Journal.

The Journal's information in the case of Gov. Leslie's not being re-elected Governor of this State is very deficient. One term of the office of Governor in Kentucky renders the incumbent ineligible for the next term, and Leslie never requested a reelection. It is not seldom that Leslie is pronounced the best Governor Kentucky has had since Stevenson filled the office, and no doubt he would have made a strong race this time had his aspirations been in that direction.

A Washington dispatch says of the tariff tinkers: "Further consultations of the members of the Randall Democracy have been held to consider a tariff bill. In addition to the removal of the tax on tobacco and fruit brandy, the bill will probably place some coarse wools on the free list, and probably iron ore. Louisiana people are to be consulted, and if they will consent, there will probably be a slight reduction in the sugar tariff. The plan now is to present a bill and ask its immediate reference to the committee of the whole, instead of sending it to the committee on ways and means. If the Republican co-operate this bill will pass, but it is not likely they will. Their game is to prevent a Democratic house from doing anything.

Mr. Randall expects to have his tariff bill ready by the time the house meets again. It is stated that he will probably ask its consideration without reference to the committee on ways and means, and directly to the committee of the whole. Whether this can be done depends on the attitude of Morrison and the Republican leaders. Morrison is pretty well disciplined, and his friends say he has expressed a readiness to take a new tack, and co-operate with his late antagonist in getting up a bill for the reduction of the revenue, with reference to economic questions."

The druggists are agitated again over the liquor question. Some time ago Judge Pryor, of the Court of Appeals, decided that the druggists were exempt under the law of 1880 from the payment of State license for selling whisky where the sales were made for medicinal purposes. This was a decided victory for the druggists, and a number of suits brought to recover the license were thrown out of Court. It seems that an act passed by the last legislature required the druggists to pay the State license whether whisky is sold for medicinal purposes or not. This act, it seems, was only discovered a few days ago, and it went into effect on the 14th of last September. Within the past few days all the druggists in the city received notification from Capt. Lawson, State license inspector, to step up to the County Clerk's office and pay a license of $100 or lay themselves liable to prosecution. The notification was a surprise to the druggists, for all of them were under the impression that the decision of Judge Pryor settled the license question for all time to come. It is safe to say that not one of the druggists will pay the license unless compelled to do so.

Dr. Wiley Rogers informed a reporter for the Commercial last evening that if the law were enforced and the druggists required to pay the license, not one-third of them could afford to do so, and would have to cease handling liquor in any shape.—Louisville Commercial.

The 1887 crop of tobacco in this county is moving rather slowly at present—in fact but very few crops have been sold. Dave Cummings, the celebrated diamond robber, who served a five years' term in the Kentucky penitentiary, has recently been sent to prison in London, England, for robbing a hotel. The Marcum whose case was recently affirmed in the Court of Appeals is only a distant relative and not the Captain's brother.

Mrs. Clay has not lived with her husband since her return from Russia, nor have any of her children. She lives with her daughter Anna in Lexington, and her other children live on various pieces of Clay's estate, given to them by him. The Paducah Daily News tells of a large meteor which fell just across the Ohio river from that place Thursday night at 2 o'clock, striking a large two-story barn, knocking the roof off, going through the hay that was in the loft, crushing the floor of the loft to pieces, striking a horse on the neck, severing his head from his body, killing another horse and a cow that was in the barn, and then passing into the ground about two feet. Friday one of the News men visited the scene of disaster to learn and see what damage had been done, and was horrified to find everything so torn up where it struck. After getting all particulars, he chipped off particles of the projectile to take back with him, and now has them on exhibition in the News office at Paducah.

The colored school at this place had a Christmas tree Friday night. It was a very creditable tree and contained some very nice presents. After the festivities at the school house the crowd repaired to the residence of Charles Utz, Mayor of Bucktown, where those who had the wherewith, or friends that had it, feasted on turkey and cake at ten cents a slice.

The other day we re-modeled our stove pipe, after which it smoked terrifically. About the same time our printing office towel came up missing. These two misfortunes caused us much annoyance. Upon inspecting the stove pipe closely we discovered that the missing towel had been put in instead of a joint of pipe. The troubles have been corrected and all is serene again.

A prolific source of amusement for the "crack shots" in this locality during the holidays is the rifle, and a live turkey for a target at distances ranging from 30 to 120 yards. The person furnishing the turkey taxes the "shootists" ten cents a shot—the first one hitting the turkey gets it. On one or two occasions the turkey has faced the bullets the greater portion of the afternoon, and escaped without a scratch. The turkey is occasionally placed in a hole in the ground, only its head being exposed, which is rarely hit.

The almanac for 1887 gives a few items of general interest: New Year's Day comes on Saturday, Washington's Birthday on Tuesday, St. Valentine's Day on Monday, April Fool Day on Friday, Memorial Day on Monday, Fourth of July on Monday, Christmas on Sunday; Easter Sunday will be on the 10th. of April; Lent begins March 2d. There will be four eclipses—two of the sun and two of the moon. One Feb. 8th, visible as a partial eclipse in the United States. The others that occur are not visible in this country.

It is with regret that we learn that the county is going to lose one of its best citizens the coming spring in the removal of J. W. Hance, of Jackson Landing. His wife was left the home place of the late esteemed Stewart Baker by his will, and owing to its proper care requiring their personal supervision, Mr. and Mrs. Hance have decided to take possession of the property this spring. It is situated near Big Bone Springs, Boone County, and is considered valuable property. Mr. Hance has rented his place at Jackson to Wesley Keffer for the ensuing year, and has not [illegible] to sell his property in this county. [illegible]—Warsaw Independent.

Married—at the Baptist church, [illegible] ... [illegible] Anna Anderson [illegible] The wedding ceremony was performed by Mr. J. A. Huey, and the beautiful ceremony was witnessed by many friends and relatives. After the ceremony the guests repaired to the residence of Mr. J. A. Huey, [illegible] where a most sumptuous and elegant repast was discussed. Late in the evening guests, with much reluctance, departed for their several homes, only to reunite on the following day at the home of the groom's mother, where a similar good dinner and good time were enjoyed. The bride is a young lady possessing all the traits of character that tend to make one popular, and the groom is well and favorably known in Kenton and Boone counties.

Charles Whitson, of this State, went over to Patriot, Indiana, to spend Christmas eve. He was drunk, and entering a saloon, he began firing his pistol in every direction, demolishing the furniture and driving the inmates out into the street. Smith Rice, the town marshal, was summoned and entered the place, when Whitson fired at him, the ball taking effect in the abdomen, making a fatal wound. Before the plucky marshal fell, he sent a ball crashing through the brain of Whitson, who expired immediately. The marshal is still alive at last accounts, but can live only a few days.

LATER—The Coroner's jury impaneled Saturday to inquire into the shooting of Charles Whitson, of Kentucky, at Patriot, Ind., on Christmas eve, have not yet given their verdict, and there is so much conflicting testimony, and witnesses forget so easily, that it is very difficult or impossible to fix the blame for the homicide just where it belongs. The body of Whitson was [illegible] to his home in Gallatin County, and buried Sunday. The Marshal, Smith Rice, who was reported mortally wounded, is resting easy, with hopes of his recovery. The excitement is subsiding. Whitson's reputation is said to have been good.

"All's well that ends well" is a saying which was very applicable to the Cantata and weather last Friday night; for had the weather not been a little off all day Friday, the capacity of the Court house would not have been equal to the occasion. As it was, about 250 people were in the seats in the Court-house by seven o'clock Friday evening to give audience to the Cantata and receive the numerous presents for themselves and little ones.

The Christmas tree was tastefully decorated with the numerous presents, many of which were both useful and ornamental, while the hearts of the little ones were made glad with a liberal donation of such toys as their juvenile ambitions cherish.

The entertainment was opened with a quartette by Mrs. Dr. Grant, Miss Nettie Gardner, Messrs. Frank Kirkpatrick and L. M. Whitehead.

"The Little Chorus," composed of about twelve or fifteen very small children, was remarkably well rendered, and was a grand result of patient training on the part of the preceptors.

Joe Reed made his usual hit in his character songs, and added much to the evening's entertainment.

The Cantata was participated in by thirty-five voices, while Professor Mack took the role of Santa Claus. The chorus was well drilled, and the capture of Santa Claus and the defense of Mable Sheldon was suberb.

The Cantata was followed by Joe Reed in a character song, and then came the distribution of the presents, which consumed about three-fourths of an hour.

NOTES.

In token of the appreciation of Jim Westbay's enterprise as a village goose merchant, some of his admiring constituents presented him with a miniature flock of geese.

One of the RECORDER firm carried off a brass horn, which is a very appropriate present, and a reminder of what the public expects of its editorial servants.

Henry Hoffman was presented with a joint of stove pipe labeled "a scape pipe." The present was received amid a round of applause.

Joe Reed captured a ladder, but it was not Jacob's ladder. He also received a quarter of a dozen paper toboggans.

Jim Conner was on hand to receive a couple of milch cows. They weren't from Ladlow.

Miss Mattie Huey was the recipient of the handsomest present, a diamond ring.

FENCE.

A fence that is wanted and in time will be used by every one that wants a fence, either around the House, Garden or Farm, as it is cheap, durable and serviceable, to keep in check horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, chickens, etc., and restrain wolves, dogs, and rabbits, etc.

Having all the advantages of a picket fence in restraining animals from jumping, and not so liable to decay, and at much less cost, and no barbs to injure valuable stock, thus placing it far in advance of any other fence now in use, hence it must be the fence of the future; all who have it want more.

It is portable and can be removed from field to field by drawing staples from posts, taking out the splice lath and rebundling it. We offer this fence for sale in bundles of five and six rod at Burlington.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE

ESTABLISHED 1827. It is now nearly sixty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy. Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and spasms are most frequently the result of these hidden sappers and miners. When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes craving food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome diet, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, then be assured these symptoms are indications of worms.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond cavil that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too observing of the first symptoms of worms, for so surely as they exist, they can be safely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the timely use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians do not hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief afforded. Great caution must be used by every purchaser to be his own judge in one sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of FAHNESTOCK is not sufficient. He must look closely and carefully to see that the initials are B. A. FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

NEW FRANKLIN, HOWARD CO., MO.
Messrs. J. E. Schwartz & Co., Pittsburg, Pa.
Gentlemen—I have used some of that most excellent remedy, B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge, and found it to have the desired effect. I think your vermifuge can not safely be dispensed with in any family.
Yours, &c., J. W. HUBBARD, M. D.

CAMBRIDGE, MD.
Having used the original "B. A. Fahnestock" Vermifuge in my practice for many years, I have no hesitancy in recommending it as a remedy which is safe, reliable and efficient in all cases where a Vermifuge is needed.

LETTING IN THE NEW YEAR.

[illegible] the light, so [illegible] I sit alone,
Guarding the steps of the departing year,
[illegible] the sigh and [illegible] to hear,
What [illegible] of the Old Year gone,
[illegible] we should see my spirit [illegible],
A [illegible] still [illegible] of mystery [illegible]

What may be—when I know not a [illegible],
Unseen, unknown, the coming New Year stands.
Grasping a sealed [illegible] with its hands—
With strange, dim characters inscribed [illegible]
Whereto lies hid in [illegible] mystery
All that this coming year [illegible] to me!

Perchance that sealed scroll may hold within
Some sad death-sorrow for the friends I prize;
Or my own name amongst the happy lives,
Or [illegible] death [illegible] fall;
Or there be writ in characters of gold
Some joy to crown my life with bliss untold.

I watch the old moon in its slow decline—
So pass the Year beyond life's stormy sea!
Whate'er the coming New Year bring to me
I know 'tis ordered by a Hand Divine.
So fearless, until the old bells mingled din,
I ope the door and let the New Year in.

CHRISTMAS HAS COME.

Christmas time has come again!
What a joy for girls and boys,
With its snow-balling and fun,
With its sleighing and its noise!
Santa Claus has to fill
All the sweetest, loveliest things,
Dolls, like babies, beautiful,
Bells, and drums, and glittering rings.

Haste and get the little stockings,
Santa Claus you know don't stay.
Always he flies up the chimney
Ere it's light on Christmas Day.
And at night sweet little eyes
Shut as tight as tight can be,
Santa Claus don't like us looking—
Leaves us nothing if we see.

Oh, the candies! Oh, the apples!
Peeping from the stocking top;
Nuts and raisins here in plenty,
Gorgeous-looking lumps of rock.
Oh, the dolls with golden tresses!
Oh, the glorious big drum!
Let us fill the air with shouting,
Dear old Christmas time has come!

Every face is wreathed with gladness.
Oh, it is a sight to see
Such a set of lovely fairies
Dancing 'round the Christmas tree!
Santa Claus has left his treasures
For his darlings every one.
Is not this a time of pleasures!
Dear old Christmas time has come!

A RESIDUARY LEGATEE.

A Cup of Cold Water and a New Year's Present.

[Original.]

THE immense pile of bricks and mortar standing near the river side, in Caplaville, tells the most casual observer of accumulated wealth joining with muscle and endurance to supply hundreds of human beings with food, raiment and shelter; tells, also, of human need aiding wealth to increase its glittering heaps. The building is ugly enough in proportion and detail by daylight; but at the moment of which we would speak, five minutes before six o'clock p. m., November 20, 1880, it was transformed into a "thing of beauty" by the gas lights which shone through its numerous large rectangular windows.

A steam whistle sounded from some subterranean depth. A bell clanged in a small belfry above the roof. The motion of whirring wheel and flying shuttle ceased, and almost as quickly the operatives were rushing down stairs and out of the gate. A motley procession it was, of both sexes, various ages and different nationalities. By the dim light of the "four-foot-an-hour" gas burners, which the economical selectmen of Caplaville had distributed at respectful distances, no one would have singled out Julia Leighton from the throng; unless the start, the involuntary shudder elicited, when profane or coarse words sullied the evening air, had been noticed. The worsted nube, wound about her head and throat, was not snowy white. The dark plaid shawl that covered her shoulders was as coarse as those worn by many of her associates in labor. Her rusty black dress was made more rusty by the fine particles of cotton that adhered to it.

Poor Julia! brought up in affluence and taught to be personally neat, almost to a fault, she had not discovered any miraculous way of keeping herself in toilet, in spite of oily machinery, dust-laden atmosphere and scanty time and means. She walked rapidly on, taking deep inspirations, grateful that she could, three times a day, fill her half-famished lungs with pure air.

"How different my life is from what I expected," she reflected. "Only two years ago I hadn't a thought of this. Father, dear generous father, was living and supplying our home with every luxury. Servants were ready to wait upon me at any moment. It had always been so; why should it not always be so? My fear was I should be selfish and forget that I ought to help God's less favored children bear their burdens. And I do believe the thought that troubles me most now is that I am living only for myself. But what can I do? When father died, and we found the old home must be given up, I was full of hope that I could take care of myself and more; but one thing after another failed, and I had come down to work with my hands only, or consent to be a burden on my mother and sister Bertha. Now I am earning my living, to be sure, but thus far I have not been able to—I doubt if, in this factory, I ever can—do more. I am working for self, living for self, and I seem to have neither time, strength or money for any thing else."

No family home shed its light on Julia's dreary life. The village house-wives had scant respect for "mill-hands," and the very qualities that would have been as a passport in an employment suited to her talents and education made her, as a mere laborer, an object of suspicion. She entered the low doorway of one of a block of factory boarding houses, passed on into the dining-room and to her place at the table; threw her shawl and nube over the back of the chair and sat down to take her tea, amid the sound of footsteps, coming and going, the scraping of chairs on the wooden floor, the din of voices, pitched to every note of the gamut and uttering uninteresting comments and rough jokes. The comfortless repast ended, she mounted to the crowded dormitory, where, in consideration of an extra allowance to the "boarding-mistress," she had a right to call a small single bedstead her own, and thus gained the ill-will of her room-mates, who looked upon her as a would-be aristocrat. As she ascended the stairs, a querulous, half-moaning sound fell upon her ear. When she reached the room the moaning became words.

"I'm so thirsty. I'm so thirsty."

"What's the matther wid ye?" cried Maggie O'Brien, coming in behind Julia and looking towards a bed, close under the eaves, in the farther corner of the room. "Isn't it wather ye have, close beside yo! Can't ye be aisy now an' lit the gurris have a bit ave pace! It's thired we are."

The moaning voice came again; "I'm so thirsty—that's clatern water—I can't drink it—in that rusty tin cup."

"It's mighty foine we are," exclaimed Maggie. "Sure an' we'll sind fur yez silver cup, wid the gould linin' widin' it."

"Who is she?" asked Julia, in an under tone.

"Don' ye know Nancy Bint? Its meself thot every sowl in ther mills was acquainted ter Nancy Bint fur tho mane, stingy Yankee she is. Sure, don't she be savin' ivvery cint an' niver goin ter a frolic fo all her mane stingy life?" cried Maggie, whose fondness for finery told sadly on her every day wardrobe and reduced her savings to zero.

"An' what fur's ther mistthress slat her here fur ter be tormentin' ther likes ave us!" continued Maggie. "It's a crass consumpshin she is on! It's in ther house furnished or this wan she's been. Mebbe ther gurrls wouldn't [illegible] ther likes ave her an' more."

Julia approached the bed where lay the sufferer, a woman whom time, hard work and scanty, miserly pinching had made thoroughly unattractive to all but those to whom nothing human is foreign. Julia shook up the pillow, smoothed the wrinkled bedding as well as she could, and was about to raise the cup of water to the parched lips, but the expression of disgust on the sick woman's face arrested her hand. An excursion into the kitchen and an encounter with the irritable, over-wrought "boarding mistress," Mrs. Smithers, was not to be thought of; therefore Julia turned reluctantly away. The unsympathetic, emphatic remonstrances of the other inmates of the room, after a time, silenced the complainer, and when Julia was ready to descend to her early breakfast the sick woman was slumbering uneasily.

All the morning, above the clatter of the machinery, that moaning voice: "I'm so thirsty—I'm so thirsty!" sounded in Julia's ears. Her purse was so light that the taking from it of a single twenty-five cent piece would involve self-denial. She could not ask Mrs. Smithers for a pitcher and tumbler, for the request, interpreted as a hint that she had not discharged her whole duty, would be resented. But the thirsty soul must not ask in vain for a cup of cold water. Julia filched from the short space given for dinner time enough to buy a small stone pitcher and a cheap tumbler. When the evening bell once more released her she carried her purchases to the town pump, made them as bright as, with the help of cold water, she could, and, with full pitcher, was soon standing at the weary one's bedside.

Day after day the cold water was placed beside the thirsty soul. Day after day the bedding was smoothed and the pillows shaken up, but not one word of thanks did the ministering factory girl receive. Let us not blame poor Nancy too much, she was slowly wasting away, not in "crass consumption," but with a disease that unstrung every nerve.

November, with its biting winds and chilling storms, passed away, and December, with its bitter cold and blocking snows, speeding towards its close, brought the day which reminds us of the lowly born Babe who came to bring gifts unto men. On Christmas eve Julia laid beside the pitcher of fresh cold water a card bearing on it a cross and the inscription: "An heir of God through Christ," and hastening to the depot was soon on the way to her native city where the Christmas welcome of her mother and sister awaited her.

"I don't see," said one of Julia's roommates, as she seated herself at the tea-table the same evening, "I don't see what my lady Leighton wants to fash herself with that ugly old thing up-stairs for! She don't get a thank yer for it. Wonder if she thinks Nancy's goin' ter leave her money to her. They say she's got a pile stowed away somewheres."

"Much ye knows about it," said Maggie O'Brien. "Didn't yez hear Mr. Smithers sayin' lasth wake Nancy'd spint mbost ahl her money fur shares in ther Updown mill! Niver a cint has it paid, it's a year gone now an' Mr. Smithers' thinkin' it niver'll pay fur a long day yit. Sure, ef yez didn't hear that same Miss Leighton was hoarin' it. It's me own beliefe it's love ave the good Lord, niver mind if she do be goin' ter a Yankee church ivery Shunday. It's love ave the good Lord that's makin' Miss Leighton take pity on Nancy. Anny way, it's meself'd be ashamed ter say a mane thing concarnin' ther likes ave her, this blessed Christmas time."

All things come to an end, human suffering as well as human joy. The time came when Nancy needed not even "a cup of cold water." When Julia entered her boarding-house one New Year's eve, Mrs. Smithers handed her a sealed note. The factory girl opened it, and to her surprise, found written, in a trembling hand, the following words:

"I haven't a blood relation living in the world. I haven't but one friend in the world, Miss Julia Leighton. What has made her never miss all these long weeks, bringing me that blessed cold water and turning my pillows, no matter how cold or stormy it was or how tired she was, yes, or how cross I was? I know not if it was not the love of the dear Lord in whom I have learned to trust since she began to minister unto me. Will she see that my poor body has decent burial, and then take all of mine there is left for her own. And may God bless her and hers.
NANCY BENT."

The signature was duly witnessed by one of the factory overseers, Mrs. Smithers and son.

Julia stood beside Nancy Bent's last resting-place and wept tears of sincere sorrow, not for "one loved and lost," but because this sister had lived so loveless a life that there had been no one who, for real friendship's sake, had ever wished her a Merry Christmas or a Happy New Year. The bills for the simple ceremonial and its concomitants being settled and the clergyman being paid a moderate fee, there was left to the heir nothing but the Updown stock.

As she, in her turn, the next pay-day, making one in the long file that wound through the paymaster's office, passed the desk, she was accosted by the agent of the factory, Mr. Bulfinch.

"Miss Leighton, I believe," said the man of means.

Julia bowed deferentially and stepped aside, that she might not hinder the hundreds who were pressing on behind her to take the envelopes containing their month's earnings.

"Mr. Brightstein is overseer in your room, I think," Mr. Bulfinch went on, "I wish he could speak as well of all his loom tenders as he does of you. He tells me you are Nancy Bent's residuary legatee. If I mistake not she left some Updown stock!"

"Yes, sir, a few shares."

"Well, that mill hasn't paid any thing recently, I suppose you know. In fact, it's down so low now it isn't even quoted; however, if I can do you a good turn, I am quite willing to. You would like to turn it into money, no doubt. Just bring the certificates into the counting-room to-morrow. If I'm not there Mr. Stacy will pay you for it, at the rate of ten dollars a share. That's more than it's worth. You see the Updown is all run out; the machinery is behind the age and makes an antiquated style of goods."

This being said in an off-hand way, with the air of a man to whom no one would dare to say nay, Mr. Bulfinch turned on his heel so quickly that he hardly heard Julia's "thanks," uttered in rather a low tone. As she passed out, she could not be deaf to the jokes that were passing among the operatives; or help knowing that she, herself, was the object of their ridicule. Though Mr Bulfinch inspired the toilers under him with some awe, he was not popular, for the hands gave him the credit of originating some burdensome regulations, and any one on whom he conferred the rare honor of his notice was sure to be made uncomfortably prominent.

"Some folks got a great present this New Year. Wish I could have one," said one.

"F mo an' you'd only git ter be rsiddory leg'tee, mebbe ther big buys 'd couvarse 'th us," said another.

Maggie O'Brien, who had been directly behind Julia in the line, lingered at the gate.

"It's an auld rat, th' agint is!" she declared. "He's afther buyin' Nancy's Updown. Threw for ye, now. He niver buys that that's wuth nothin', an' he'll niver pay a pinny more than tho wuth 'ave that same," and Maggie ran on, not caring to be too intimate with one who was, though unjustly, disliked. Julia walked on wondering where the "wuth ave" property that was "wuth nothing" at all could be. She could but think that Maggie's comment on Mr. Bulfinch's dealings was a shrewd one, moreover it seemed almost sacrilege to part with Nancy's life work for so paltry a sum.

The certificates were not handed to Mr. Stacy, but the jokes about the "residuary legatee's New Year's present" were kept up, and Julia was known all through the mills as the Residuary Legatee. This might have been hard to bear had she not remembered that in refreshing a weary body with cold water she had offered "the water of eternal life" to a fellow immortal; she had preached Christmas [illegible] more effectually than she could have done by words; she had induced a darkened soul to recognize the fact that the [illegible] "The true light which lighteth every one that cometh into the world."

Julia was several times approached by would-be buyers of the Updown shares. Though even the smallest sum offered would have been of great value to her in her straitened circumstances, her "good genius" prompted her to refuse. It was through Maggie O'Brien that she first learned that the "patient waiter" had been "no loser." Approaching the dining room after the close of one working day, she noticed that the tumult was even greater than usual, but when she appeared in the doorway all voices were hushed but that of Maggie O'Brien, who was shouting:

"Well, she didn't now! I told her so." Then appealing to Julia: "Did ye be afther sellin' Nancy's mill stock? Didn't I be tellin' yez ter hould on?"

"No, I haven't sold the stock," answered Julia, smiling at the earnestness of her interlocutor.

"Isn't that what I'm tellin' yez!" exclaimed Maggie, looking triumphantly around; then turning back to Julia, she added: "Auld Bulfinch an' more er them auld bys that's made er gould's afther settin' them mills agoin, an' folks is sayin' ther stock's thravellin' up ivvery day. Ain't it glad ye are I tould yez not ter be sellin' it!"

As no one at the table seemed disposed to contradict Maggie, Julia, though not fully believing in her good fortune, wrote that very evening to a broker whom she knew to be a former business agent of her father's and inquired whether the time was favorable for selling Updown shares. The reply came promptly:

"There is no Updown on the market. Nearly all the stock has been quietly bought by capitalists who have the ability to make the mills a paying investment. We do not hesitate to advise you, if you hold Updown, to offer it at auction, with instructions not to sell for less than cent. per cent. above par. Should be happy to attend to the business for you."

The advertisement of ten shares of Updown drew together a large company; agents of some of the principal holders of the property who were struggling for the balance of power in the corporation; former owners who considered themselves victims and who were determined to see that these last shares should not be bought for a song; those who meant to make the occasion an hilarious one, and some real friends of the Leighton family. The auctioneer, recognizing his opportunity, offered the shares on condition that the highest bidder should take one or more, at his option; the next highest, one or more, and so on till the ten were taken. Excitement ran high, the bidding was so rapid that only the thoroughly initiated could follow it, and the shares that had cost Nancy Bent less than a hundred dollars each stood her residuary legatee in fifteen times that for every share.

Julia Leighton no longer works in the Caplaville mills, but no summer passes that she does not visit the town to see that the turf grows green around a marble cross bearing the name Nancy Bent and the inscription: "An heir of God through Christ." And every New Year she places on that cross a wreath of immortelles.

A TURNIP-HEAD BABY.

The Wonderful Freak Born to a Well-to-Do St. Louis Mother.

[St. Louis Chronicle.]

The reporter and one of the oldest practitioners in St. Louis, stopped at the residence of a well-to-do if not rich merchant, not one hundred miles from Fourth and Olive streets.

"Now, remember you are a medical student," said the doctor, warningly.

The old physician pulled the bell, at the same time remarking that he had been the family physician for ten years. The door opened and a matronly lady of forty appeared on the threshold.

"Good morning, doctor. Quite a stranger when we measure time."

After an introduction the doctor remarked: "We have called to see the baby and——"

There was an expression of sadness that quickly crowded itself into the face of the lady, and after a glance at the reporter, and a searching gaze into the earnest face of the doctor she said, with a sigh:

"Well, if you desire it."

Of all the monstrosities that have been ushered into the world, perhaps there was never any that lived, in perfect health, that is such a perfect wonder as the one that was then brought into the presence of the reporter. It looked like a human child as far as the body was concerned, except that its head resembled a hairy turnip. The face was square on top of the head, and the neck came out of the back of it.

The reporter took the child on his lap, and it was not necessary to bend over to see its face. That face—a flat, expressionless countenance, was always looking up. It bent its neck as much to the side or backward as it did at the point beneath its chin, but in no way could it see in any other direction than toward the ceiling.

The head can only be likened to a turnip and the face is not any better shaped than that which a boy could cut in the top of a big Spanish onion. The skin is tightly drawn—so tightly in fact that the eyes and mouth never shut.

"Is it true," asked the reporter, "that the child can not shut its eyes or mouth?"

"It is simply impossible for it to do so. When it wants to sleep we throw a vail over its head and that seems to satisfy it and it sleeps. The eyes are always open, poor little thing. It rests just as well on one side as the other, or on its back or stomach; it seems to have no preference."

The spinal cord enters the center of the head and the hair grows all round the skull.

The child has been before the medical students in the college of this city several times in the demonstrating lectures it is said, and is pronounced the most wonderful freak that ever lived in human form. It is eleven months old and is in perfect health.

Christmas in the Fatherland.

Christmas is far more sacred in the Fatherland than the Sabbath, and the succeeding days are scarcely less so. On the Sabbath preceding the great festival the shops are open and many a good housewife goes piously to church in the morning, does Christmas shopping in the afternoon, and finishes her fancy-work in the evening while the young people are enjoying a social dance. But on Christmas Day all work and business are put aside. The fatted calf has been killed, the festal garments made ready, and for once sweet leisure hovers over the German home. On New Year's eve the Christmas tree is lighted for the last time—then bids farewell to its glory.

Wherever the child of Germany finds himself on Christmas eve, his thoughts turn fondly homeward. No glow of tropical lands, no glitter of Arctic seas, no dazzle of Western wealth, no dream of military fame then looks so bright as the fir-tree in the window far away, whose lights shine upon the faces he loves.

"They are singing now the Christmas songs at home," he says, "and wishing for the absent ones."

He listens for the echo of the blithe old bells, he sees the radiant windows, and hears the children's shouts and the mother's gentle voice. The fountains of his heart are broken up. All Christmas Day he is a child again. In fancy he joins in the glad anthems that fill the parish church or the old Cathedral aisles,

Green with fresh holly, every pew a perch

—Ellen Soule Carhart, in Current.

Had His Hat Under It.

"What do you mean by hanging that dirty, torn stocking on my door-bell?" said an irate gentleman to a tramp whom he found sitting on his front doorsteps on Christmas morning.

"It's der ondly wun I got, boss, an' I got me 'at under it ter catch any wittals as drops frew der holes."

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—A few oyster shells, mixed with the coal used for a furnace of large size, will effectually prevent the accumulation of clinkers.—Chicago Journal.

—Always hang a broom up when not in use. Put an ordinary, small-sized screw-eye in the end of the handle if no better way suggests itself.

—Plain Tea Cake: Three teacupfuls of dry powdered sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sour milk, three pints of flour, three beaten eggs, half a teaspoonful of soda. [illegible] Roll thin and bake in a quick oven.—Good Housekeeping.

—Pudding Sauce: Take two cups of white sugar, a lump of butter the size of an egg, one well-beaten egg. Stir these together, then add a teaspoonful of boiling water; put it in a saucepan until it thickens; do not let it boil; flavor with lemon or vanilla.—Boston Post.

—Do not allow peach trees to bear fruit until after the third year from planting, as a rule, and they will be beneficial. Many growers begin to force the trees too early, and allow them to fruit as soon as the trees will bear, but it is best to get the trees in a vigorous condition the first two or three years.—Chicago Tribune.

—Stewed Eggs: Boil eight eggs hard and leave them in cold water until cold, take off the shells, slice them, lay in a stone, china or block tin dish; pour over them a well-seasoned gravy, thickened with brown flour; sift fine crumbs over all and brown in a quick oven. They are very savory if properly seasoned.—Cincinnati Times.

—Dehorning cattle, remarks Prof. Stewart, is a painful process. The inner core of the horn of an ox is a continuation of the frontal sinus, and is lined with the periosteum, a most sensitive membrane and full of nerves and blood-vessels. Cutting with a saw prevents bleeding because it tears and does not divide the blood-vessels smoothly. The professor favors taking proper steps to prevent the growth of horns in calves.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Okra Gumbo: Chop a pound of veal into pieces an inch square, cut a slice of ham into dice, and slice three dozen extra pods, one onion and a pod of pepper; sprinkle them lightly with flour, and fry until a nice brown in a tablespoonful of lard. Add to this a half-gallon of boiling water and boil gently for two hours. When half done put in two tablespoonfuls of tomatoes and just before sending to the table season with any preferred herbs. Serve with boiled rice.—Boston Bulletin.

TREAT THEM KINDLY.

A Little Wholesome Advice as to How Live-Stock Should be Cared For.

We are told by our esteemed contemporary, the Farmer's Best Friend, that "no animal does as well as it should that is not comfortable. Study the comfort of all kinds of live-stock."

Although we have never lived upon a farm longer than the usual period of summer vacation, we feel justified in agreeing with the Farmer's Best Friend that what it says above is absolutely true to the letter.

Therefore, believing as we do that animals should be kept as comfortable as possible, we wish to scatter a little wholesome advice upon the subject, which we trust will be taken in the same kindly spirit in which it is offered.

If you want to get the maximum amount of work out of your ox, you must show him that you love him. Don't kick him and beat him with rails. Be kind to him. Pet him and make him comfortable. Don't leave him in a cold, dreary stable all night. Bring him into the house and let him sleep on the sofa all night, with a crazy-quilt thrown over him. Then feed him on olives, and tie ribbons on his horns, and after awhile he will grow to love you, and only think of doing all the work he can to repay you for your kind treatment. Instead of walking before the plow, he will gallop, and you will succeed in disposing of an acre an hour.

Then let the donkey sleep on the rug in front of the fire. If he brays at the fire he will only be an improvement on a pair of bellows, and you can soon soothe him with Schuberts serenade. Feed him on caramels, and make him feel comfortable; then you will not have the slightest trouble in getting him to run on the treadmill belonging to the churn. And he will never kick the children, or roll on them after he has playfully thrown them off his back. And you may get him so fond of you that he will kick the servant-girl's favorite cousin through the window if he undertakes to stay later than ten. But never let him lay his eyes on the hobby-horse. A donkey is sensitive, and he would not relish the spectacle of any thing in the shape of a horse on rockers with his mane and tail nailed on, and a pair of ears made of sole-leather, to say nothing of the bridle being fastened in his mouth as though it grew there.

To keep the hens happy, bring them in the house at night, and permit them to perch on the family tree; if you have no family tree, arrange them along the portiere poles and the hat-stand. Then, if a thief should come in at the dead of night, and evince a fancy for your new overcoat, the hens will save it in the same way as the geese saved Rome. Then they will lay eggs in the waste-basket.

If you are an author, they will give you ideas. A hen building her nest in an umbrella-stand is just as good as the wren doing the same act in the mouth of a cannon.

The ducks could be brought in in the same way, and kept over night in the bath-tub and wash basins. Care should be taken to put the soap out of reach.

We will say nothing about bringing the pigs in the house. Every body knows how the pig appreciates kind treatment in the domestic circle.

Therefore, be kind to your animals. Make them comfortable and happy, and you may rest assured that you will be more than repaid by them for your kindness and consideration.—Puck.

A Hint for Stout Ladies.

It is a pity, writes a Paris correspondent, that all stout ladies born in or about 1830 can not see how the tire-woman of Queen Isabella arranges her mistress' head when she is going to church, to a flower-show, to drive out, or on a journey. It seldom looks muffled up, yet it is nearly always so. The bonnet, or whatever it may be called, is a drapery of rich blonde lace, sometimes white and sometimes black. There is just garniture enough to show that the wearer does not wish to be reckoned an old lady, and is not ambitious to pass for a young one. There is always a touch of the Spanish vail in the way in which the lace is made to fall, but not more.—Chicago Times.

GIRL RAG-PICKERS.

The Romance of an Old Coat Picked Up by One of Them.

A little off Center avenue, on Hazel street, stands the rag shop of an old Pole. It is an unpretentious brick building, to which a coat of light green paint has been applied. In the interior are stacks upon stacks of assorted rags. The owner was not at home when the reporter called, but his presence was not necessary to an unraveling of the mystery which surrounds the business, as his wife was as well up in it as she appeared to be in the rearing of half a dozen children who clustered round her knees.

"We have many girls working for us," she said. "Their scarcity may be known by the fact that we had to advertise for some. The work they have to perform is not injurious. As soon as the dozen men we have gathering the rags return to the shop, their harvest is given into the hands of a man to inspect. All of the rags which are soiled or supposed to be infectious are taken out by him. These he thoroughly cleanses by putting through a machine used for that purpose.

"The clean ones are put directly into the hands of the girls. As they are paid by the hundred weight, it is but a short time until they are assorted. Barrels are used for this work. Into one is thrown the white fabric, into another, the colored, and so on. Pieces of silk are separated from cotton and wool.

"When a sufficient amount of each has been sorted to form a sack lay of five hundred pounds, they are thrown into it, bound and sent away. As we must deal through middlemen, they do not reach the factory in which they are converted into paper at once. The middleman gives them an additional examination, rectifying in doing this any negligence which may have been practiced by those who first handled them."

"Do the girls make any thing like fair wages at the work?" asked the reporter.

"Yes," she responded, "if they apply themselves to it. Many of them make as high as eight dollars a week. The indolent makes less, and retire from the business in consequence."

"Do they ever find any valuables among the rags?" was also asked.

"Well, in the first place, the gatherers have an opportunity to first examine them. It is rarely that they prove dull enough to leave any thing behind."

One of the rosy-cheeked damsels, whose deft fingers bring order out of the chaos of a rag pile, said: "When I first went to the business I had as a companion a girl who loved a man above her station. She was pure and true. In her pickings she came across a coat. She was prompted to search the pockets. In one of them she found a letter. It told of her. The coat belonged to her suitor, and what she read was such a travesty on herself and her love for him that it killed her. In a few months we took up a subscription among the girls to lay on her coffin.—Pittsburgh Dispatch,

A Model Congressman.

There is a Representative in Congress from one of the Southern States who manages to live comfortably in Washington at an outlay of not more than $1,500 per annum. He has no family, and neither drinks wine, etc., nor uses tobacco. He apparently enjoys life in his own way and is a general favorite with his Congressional associates. He has neat, but not extravagant apartments in a respectable section of the city, and dresses in good taste. Many of his companions are very anxious to learn his methods of saving so much of his salary, but he refrains from giving any advice on the subject, telling them good-naturedly that it is the result of his self-control. He is not in any sense a miser, but he is about the best specimen of a model moral Congressman in existence today.—N. Y. Post.

—The measuring of the candle power of a light is accomplished by comparing the shadow cast by a rod in the light of a standard candle with the shadow cast by the light to be tested. By moving the latter toward or away from the rod, a point will be reached at which the shadow cast by both lights will be of the same intensity. The intensity of the two lights is directly proportional to the squares of their distances from the shadows—that is, suppose the light to be tested is three times the distance of the candle, its illuminating power is nine times as great.—Chicago Times.

—As a Salvation Army soldier in Frederictown, N. B., walked out of a store with a dozen eggs, his foot slipped and he and the eggs went down with a smash. He never said a word when the boys laughed, though he looked mad, and in the evening at the meeting he told how the devil had got into the eggs just to try and get him to swear. And then there was great rejoicing when he told how he got the best of the devil by keeping his mouth shut.

Fast Trains.

The "Flying Buckeye" is the name of a new train put on this winter over the Bee Line. It leaves Boston 8:30 and arrives at Cincinnati at 10:30 a. m., stopping at [illegible], Franklin and Middletown for passengers to [illegible] and at the crossing of the C. H. & D. R. R. in Cincinnati. The rate of speed allowing for the stops is forty miles an hour. This is good time for winter, but the Bee Line people claim they can run it twenty minutes quicker, as their road bed is fully ballasted and track laid with steel rails weighing 68 pounds to the yard.

The New York and Boston Limited Express leaving Cincinnati at 7:00 p. m. and arriving at New York 6:00 p. m. and at Boston 9:10 p. m. (with Meridian time), is the fastest and finest train from the South-western Territory in America.

This train has been run successfully for New York business for two years, and is therefore no experiment; but previous to the recent change of time Boston passengers by this train were subjected to a delay of four hours and forty minutes at Albany and from there were taken by a slow train, arriving at Boston 8:30 next morning.

The management has at last concluded to shorten the time to Boston and the Boston & Albany railroad supplies the lacking ingredient by adding a specially fast train, leaving Albany promptly on the arrival of the Limited and arriving at Boston 10:10 p. m. (Eastern time). This reduces the time between Cincinnati and Boston to 26 hours and 8 minutes, a shortening of 4¼ hours.

$500 Not Called For.
It seems strange that it is necessary to persuade men that you can cure their diseases by offering a premium to the man who fails to receive benefit. A Wonderful Freak of Nature is sometimes exhibited in our public exhibitions. When we gaze upon some of the peculiar freaks dame nature occasionally indulges in, our minds revert back to the creation of man, "who is so fearfully and wonderfully made." The mysteries of his nature have been unraveled by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, and through his knowledge of those mysteries he has been able to prepare his "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a specific for all blood taints, poisons and humors, such as scrofula, pimples, blotches, eruptions, swellings, tumors, ulcers and kindred affections. After Diphtheria

The patient recovers strength slowly, as the system is weak and debilitated, and the blood poisoned by the ravages of the disease. What is needed is a good reliable tonic and blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which has just the elements of strength for the body, and vitality and richness for the blood which soon bring back robust health. After scarlet fever or pneumonia it is also of great benefit.

"After recovering from a prolonged sickness with diphtheria, and needing something to build me up, I took two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I felt good results from the first dose. It seemed to go from the top of my head to the ends of my toes. I know Hood's Sarsaparilla is a good thing." G. H. STRATTON, Druggist, Westfield, Mass.

"Upon our little girl, who had been sick with scarlet fever, the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla was most marvelous, entirely removing the poison from her blood and restoring her to good health. Hood's Sarsaparilla deserves our highest praise." E. G. STRATTON, Swampscott, Mass.

For Weak Women.
Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.: "About the first of September, 1881, my wife was taken with uterine hemorrhage. The best styptics the physician could prescribe did not check it and she got more and more enfeebled. She was troubled with Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, numbness of the limbs, sickness of the stomach and loss of appetite. I purchased a trial bottle of your Vegetable Compound. She said she could discover a salutary effect from the first dose. Now she is comparatively free from the Prolapsus, Stomach's sickness, &c. The hemorrhage is very much better and is less at the regular periods. Her appetite is restored, and her general health and strength are much improved. We feel that we have been wonderfully benefited and our hearts are drawn out in gratitude for the same and in sympathy for other sufferers, for whose sakes we allow our names to be used." C. W.
